CHAPTER IX.—Continued.

Granny did not see many of her friends indeed... She had never been better than during that hour.

Such endless numbers of fine folks... As for Cecyl, he was watched for more eagerly than he had ever been.

He had also been in waiting, full of... He had been the more lively which had upset his calculations.

By-and-by she had another pleasure... Then it would be all joyful greetings, and renewal of old ties, and eager inquiries.

What had brought her back into the world? Where was the orphan child who had been presented with an inheritance?

CHAPTER X.
GERALDINE BEGINS TO PAY BACK.

In London how easy we visit, and meet, in pleasure the theme, and sweet smiles are our reward.

Now, poor old granny did not altogether like this; and for two reasons... As for Cecyl, he was watched for more eagerly than he had ever been.

CHAPTER XI.
THE MAN WHO WROTE THIS WAS AT ONE TIME A PRACTICING PHYSICIAN.

The man who wrote this was at one time a practicing physician, at another time a tall preacher, at another time a powerful proselyter.

Now, poor old granny did not altogether like this; and for two reasons... As for Cecyl, he was watched for more eagerly than he had ever been.

MONTREAL'S HEADQUARTERS, BEAUFORT.

of interest to the traveler. Perhaps the Montmorency Falls, in the Montmorency River, which falls into the St. Lawrence, eight miles below Quebec, is the greatest natural attraction around Quebec.

MAKING HIM USEFUL.

The Indoor Cyclist Is No Longer Entirely an Ornament. An ancient proverb very wisely recommends us to combine the useful with the agreeable.
