

CHAPTER XIV.

So now we know as much about the matter or very nearly as much as Geraldine did herself. She had been equipped for her morning ride, and gloves in hand, she had been no time for discussion, nor for mentioning the idea to Cecil, who was waiting outside, more than that she had decided to go on her own.

Presently Geraldine murmured something to himself. She bent over her saddle to get a steady grip on the reins, and she was looking at the horse as if she were engaged in something else.

They had been in the row that morning, and it seemed to young Raymond that the woman on the horse was watching him, and altogether it seemed as if she were engaged in something else.

And then, just as he was about to start, he saw a man in a top hat and coat, who he had seen before, looking at him from the doorway of the house.

EFFECTS OF DEEP-SEA PRESSURE.

It is not unusual for bottles of champagne to be dipped and then in salt water, when there is no ice on shipboard, in order to get the wine to a salable temperature, but never long enough to cause contact between the salt water and the wine.
