Before the great mistake was made by the people in placing Cleveland and his party in office there was a surplus in the Treasury, and the Democratic leaders denounced the surplus. Since Cleveland and his friends have come into the management of the affairs of Government, they have gotten away from the surplus entirely, and they have so wrecked the affairs of Government that instead of a surplus there is a debt every month, and every now and then they have to issue new bonds to pay for the running expenses of Government.

We are pleased to acknowledge a serenade tendered us last Saturday evening by the McAlisterville band, and regret that we were not at home at the time, for aside from the pleasure of being present on such an occasion, we missed their musical treat. Their music is always pleasant and so cosmopolitan in its rendition that their playing is considered equal to bands made up of trained musicians that have traveled far and wide and have their homes in populous centers.

The young men of the McAlisterville band have talent for music and they evince it in every note of their instruments.

Five hundred men were doing their best to extinguish fire in woods in Huntingdon county last Friday. Farm buildings in a number of places throughout the county were saved with difficulty. A large flock of sheep in Onondaga township was burned to death.

Last Sunday, Mord Hower, who with Nathan Wiseman not long since made a trip from Juniata county into Canada and back in 8 days, met with an accident to his bicycle, a half mile from town while on his way to Harrisburg. Hower abandoned the trip by bicycle and took a train to Harrisburg. The bicycle was repaired after Hower's return from that place on Monday.

The fire that raged a short time on Sunday evening after night fall on Moyer's ridge, is believed to have been started by boys in a hollow tree to smoke out a rabbit. Among the citizens in town who saw the light and hastened there to assist in extinguishing the fire was John Holobough, Jr., Wm. Hawk, John Graybill, Wm. Diven, Jacob H. Will. About the time they reached the fire, a light sprinkle of rain fell and dampened the leaves and gave them a chance to switch out the flame. The fire had burnt over a number of acres and was in finer order to begin a career of destruction along the ridge.

The Bloomfield Advocate of the 23rd inst. says: A son of John Dunkleberger of Spring township, was falling on the barn floor by the light of a lantern last Thursday evening when the lantern upset, allowing the oil, which ignited to run over the straw. The fire was rapidly spreading, and a domestic came to his aid, and by means of phosphate bags smothered the flames. It was a narrow escape from a big fire.

The Fravel mill, or better known to the former generation as the old "Berkstresser mill," in Centre township, was burnt to the ground Thursday night of last week with all its contents.

A pleasure party from Danvers, upon returning from Bloomfield about 10 o'clock p. m. discovered fire issuing from the roof, and gave the alarm to the proprietor, Charles A. Harkinson and family, living in an adjacent house. There was no chance to save the mill, and the house near by was only saved with the greatest exertion. The Danvers party, who comprised the greater portion of those present, worked most faithfully and earned the highest praise. It is supposed that the fire originated from a heated journal, the mill having been run during the day, or from spontaneous combustion.

The upper stories were built of pine and the lower of oak. Despite the fact that the water was turned on the wheel, the heat was so intense that it was almost entirely destroyed. About one hundred dollars' worth of goods was destroyed. The loss is estimated at $3,000 with $1,200 insurance.

It would be just the thing for the directors to attend, or that occasion, if they cannot attend other sessions of the Institute and take part in the discussion for or against, as their judgment approves or disapproves. There are directors who have common sense, which if expressed on public questions would prove to be pointers to the solution of vexatious and wild cat questions that are sometimes thrust into Teachers' Institutes as well as into other public assemblies.

Murder on the T. V. Railroad.

The Tuscarora Valley Railroad, up to last Thursday, was happily exempt from the usual run of accidents and occurrences through which both life and limb are often lost, but on that day two trusty employees of the road lost their lives. It was not an accident, however, that caused their death. They were deliberately murdered by some unknown person or persons, who placed ties and stones on the road and thereby threw the locomotive and tender off the track. The diabolical obstruction was placed on the railroad on a curve about four miles west of Waterford. The train left Waterford between 12 and 1 P. M., westward bound for Blair's Mills with Jerome Noble, half brother of ex Sheriff Noble of this town as engineer, and George Pannebaeker, son of Samuel Pannebaeker of Pannebaeker's Island as fireman. The train consisted of a passenger coach and a coal car. The road having been recently completed to Blair's Mills, a turn-table has not yet been constructed at that place and for that reason the locomotive and tender were running backwards pulling the train. The train was running at a moderate rate of speed, when on a curve above mentioned, the tender encountered obstruction and was thrown off the track, and was followed by the locomotive over an embankment, just steep enough to upset both locomotive and tender. The coach and coal car did not leave the track. Pannebaeker was caught in such a way in the wreck that one foot lay in the fire box of the locomotive, and the broken end of a steam pipe was discharging the escaping steam against his body about the stomach. He was steamed and cooked brown from head to foot. He was blind but was conscious and could hear and speak. He expressed a desire to have the prayers of a minister. There chanced to be a Trinity student named Pyles on the train, and he prayed for the unfortunate man which seemed to greatly soothe his mind. While Noble escaped the fire and the steam, the messenger of death had come to him in the form of an iron rod from some part of the machinery of the locomotive and penetrated his bowels and passed through him and came out of his back. He was dying when Col. Moorehead, who was injured about the head drew him from the wreck. Mr. Pyles asked whether he should pray for him. The dying man thanked him for his solicitude, but said that he had all his life tried to live a Christian life, and he had consigned his soul to the care of his Maker. Colonel Moorehead, proprietor of the wreck took place on Monday from the wreck took place, was painfully anxious to have the dying men taken to their homes at Waterford as soon as possible. There was no engine at hand and a coal car was in the rear of the passenger coach. Men from the community were gathered, and under his direction the coal car was thrown off the track over the bank, and then the dying men were tenderly placed on cushions in the passenger coach, and it was shoved by the men to Waterford where both the engineer and fireman died. Pannebaeker was aged about 29 years, and leaves a family to mourn his loss. His funeral took place on Sunday. Interment at McCulloch's Mills. Noble was aged about 35 years, and was engaged to be married next month. His funeral took place on Monday from the residence of his step-brother, ex-Sheriff Noble in Mifflintown. Interment in Westminster Presbyterian cemetery. The motive that caused the obstruction to be placed on the track, is known only to those who did it. If it was murder they accomplished their purpose, and for that accomplishment they will have no peace of mind or rest to the end of their lives. It will be left upon earth for them, with the chances of it being intensified by an imprisonment for life or hanging.

The Hertzler Store Robbery.
The Hertzler store at Port Royal was burglarized on the night of the 25th of last April. A few days after the robbery three young men were arrested at Huntingdon for the crime, and brought to this place to answer at court. Two escaped from the jail one night last summer. The other one who gave his name as Ed. Parker was tried and found guilty and sentenced to the penitentiary last September. Before he was taken to the penitentiary he told that the Hertzler safe was exploded by one of the gang known as Tony, and that the William Hertzler bonds had been taken to New York City and their disposal of. Everything rested right there till about the middle of this present month of October when Col. John J. Patterson came up from Lancaster. The Colonel has been the head and front of the Pennsylvania Traction Company movement and operation in and about Lancaster, and recently disposed of a half interest in the system to a New York Syndicate, it is said for six million dollars, which makes the Colonel himself a millionaire. The Colonel told that he had an inquiry from one of the Traction Syndicate firm in New York, a man named Lay, that twenty-five hundred dollars Traction bonds had been offered to him for sale. The Colonel telegraphed for the numbers and when the numbers of the bonds were compared with those on the books of the Company, it was discovered they belonged to Hon. Wm. Hertzler of Port Royal. That was a clue to the stolen bonds. There was nothing said about the stock that was stolen with the bonds. The amount of the stock was twenty-five thousand dollars. Colonel Patterson informed Mr. Hertzler and he and E. M. M. Pennell, Esq., went to New York, and through information obtained through financier Lee and his detective Wodell, soon had an Italian named Francesco Aiello, aged about 29 years of 380 West 10th Street and of the firm of A. Bolognesi & Co., 67 Exchange Place, who confessed to having the bonds, but disclaimed any knowledge of the stock. He said he had obtained the bonds as a broker on a loan of $500 last May from Tony Dandereo. All this meeting between Hertzler & Pennell and Aiello and the detective took place in the rotunda of the Equitable building and such communications as the Italian had with outsiders was done over a telephone. Pennell had a description of the man Tony that is said to have exploded the safe and carried the bonds to New York, and he gave that description to Aiello, who confessed that it is the description of the man who brought the bonds to him, and the detective, added Tony, lives in New York, and we know where. Aiello did not feel like giving up the bonds and losing the money that he alleges he loaned on them. They could have been secured from him by a course of law, but Mr. Hertzler and his counsel deemed it best to give him what he agreed to take, namely four hundred and twenty-five dollars for the twenty-five hundred dollar bonds. Aiello said, he has no knowledge of the twenty-five thousand dollars stock that was loaned to him, but in the re-adjustment of Affairs that is taking place between the New York Syndicate and the Traction Company, it is probable that a new certificate of stock will be issued to Mr. Hertzler in lieu of that stolen and hidden by the thieves. It was discovered that the Italians have Gallitzin, Cambria Co., borough bonds for sale. Gallitzin bonds were stolen last spring, not many days before the Hertzler store robbery, and it is conjectured that the gang of thieves who committed both robberies, had their headquarters in Altoona at that time. The fence keeper or bank keeper in New York where the papers turned up, has been in the business of furnishing Italians on paper contracts, and in all probability is familiar with the route of travel through the Valley of the Juniata where a great many Italians have from time to time been employed on the railroad. However, Park and his confederates who were arrested for the Port Royal robbery are all Americans and the Italians may not have known anything about it previous to this commission.

Trains Wrecked near Newport.

Shortly after 2 o'clock, last Thursday morning an axle of a car in a freight train going east around the curve at Trimmer's rock, 2 miles below Newport broke and caused a wreck that covered both tracks of the railroad. Tube O'Donnell of this place, freight brakeman, was caught and held among the wrecked material of the train. Tobe seeing the passenger train coming, prayed, "Oh! Lord, save me!"

Before danger signals could be sent on the second section of No. 7 westward bound ran into the wreck with disastrous results, and singular to relate the pile of freight wreckage that lay piled on O'Donnell was knocked off him and he was released from the perilous position in which he had been thrown. He escaped with sprains and bruises in his back and sprain of left ankle. When the mail train engine struck the wreckage of the freight train, the engine and tender with engineer Daniel Wolfkell of Altoona, and fireman Joseph U. Haines of Altoona, fell over the bank into the canal. The engine turned completely around upside down and fastened both engineer and fireman under the tank in five feet of water in the canal. The water was left out of the canal, but their bodies were not recovered till on Monday when they were sent to Altoona for interment. In the wrecked mail cars were seven postal clerks, busily engaged assorting the mails. When the crash came, how they escaped seems a miracle. They all sustained injuries.

C. A. Chasler of Harrisburg, arm broken and wrist fractured.

E. L. Colville of Pittsburgh, wound above right eye and arm sprained.

E. I. Brand of Harrisburg, back of head contused, slight cut over nose, wrist sprained and arm injured.

A. E. Woodruff of Lewistown, leg and back sprained.

S. Groff of Mount Joy, contused abrasion of fingers.

A. T. Byers of Trenton, N. J., slight injury to shoulder and leg.

George Gihnor, contusion of shoulder.

J. C. Campbell of Gallitzin, abrasion of scalp and sprain of knee.

The mail cars and other wrecked material soon took fire. The Fire Department of Mifflin and Harrisburg, each were dispatched to fight and both responded. The Mifflin fire company with their engine were first on the ground and secured a most advantageous position by being taken across the canal on a bridge near the west end of the wreck, and thence down the tow-path to a place opposite the wreck and from water drawn from the canal was instrumental in keeping the fire down so that the wreck clearing crew could be protected in removing the obstruction from the tracks. By 11 o'clock one of the tracks was cleared and travel was resumed. The deceased engineer and fireman each leave a family. The remains of Wolfkell were interred at Altoona and the remains of Haines were interred at Newport of which place he was a native. He leaves a family, a wife and several children. The loss of property amounts to several hundred thousand dollars. Mail matter of every description lay scattered about the wreck and in the water of the canal.

LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN

The three great characters thus far produced by America, that are destined to live as long as literature lasts are Washington, Lincoln and Grant. The most remarkable of the three men is Abraham Lincoln. The history of his life is stranger than fiction. The people of the world are just entering upon a diligent study of his career and every scrap relative to his life, and the life of the people from whom he sprung is being diligently gathered and placed upon record. McClure's Magazine for November contains the latest and fullest record of the most remarkable character that the United States of America has yet produced. Advanced sheets of this new production lies on our table. It contains 800 illustrations, and is a marvel in that particular and must be seen to be fully appreciated and comprehended. The many portraits of him, no two of which are alike are a study worthy of men who study pictures, and the picture representations of the places, where he lived in his youthful days with their surroundings, are worth volumes to the students boys and girls of this day and generation of fast and extravagant living. Address S. S. McClure, 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.
