Capturing a Bear-

Juniata county sportsmen can relate interesting experiences in coon catching and bear trapping, but the following from the Lock Haven Ex press of November 2 is hard to equal. Eimer Probst, Lewis Probst and Ward Reeder, three Swissdale boys, none of whom are over 16 years of age, went coon hunting last night in Ramm Hollow, a branch of Queen's Run. Their dogs found a bear and commenced a fight with bruin. The dogs were getting the best of the fight and the bear started to climb a tree. One of the dogs seized the bear by the hind leg and away went the bear up the tree to a beight of over 30 feet with the dog still hang ing to his leg. The boys then open ed fire on the bear and at the first shot down came bruin and the dog. The bear had been killed by the buck-shot the boys fired at him and the dog, stunned by the fall, lay as if dead for nearly 20 minutes and then revived and all is right to-day. The boys are very much elated over the success that attended them in their first bear hunt. The bear weighed about 180 pounds.

"I was once on a gunning trip during the month of August in the hammock along the lower St. Johns river. I came vote 120,000 and the Democratic vote to a hotel on the river bank that was keeping open for the little business brought to it by the river traffic. Back of the hotel was a fringe of pines, and beyond the pines was a reach of barren country covered with a growth of blue palmetto and gallberry.

"Among the persons staying at the things which pertained to natural history. Both were well dressed. Their ands were white and smooth. In town they might have been taken for bank of Mount Clemens, on the Clinton river, tellers. One morning, before the sun 23 miles north of the city of Detroit. had taken the chill out of the air, one of these guests, in a pair of rather genteel top boots, wandered for a consider able distance through the low palmetto scrub. In his path he found a rattle-make twice as long as the orange wood stick with which he walked.

"The chill of the night air was still in the marrow of the reptile, and it was painful and fatiguing.

"My father settled on White river is to clutch the snake just back of his jaws and hold him in a firm grasp with the thumb and circling forefluger of the right hand. Carefully lifting the body of the snake with the left hand the naturalist started for the hotel with his greatly valued prize, carrying his orange wood cane under his left arm. "There is nothing else that so warms the cockles of a rattlesnake's beart as the vertical rays of the sun, and before the young naturalist had made half the journey to the hotel, the captive snake had managed, unobserved, to twist his tail about his captor's thigh. Thus anchored, he gave an ablebodied pull, which was the naturalist's first intimathe make at its middle the muscle of the reptile would be too much for the THE secret of the great Republi- right hand grasp at its throat, which was the only safeguard against a stroke from its deadly fangs. of the great Indian chieftain Tecumseh, or Tecumthe, was found among the papers of Richard J. Conner, editor of the Peru Sentinel, who died in this city July 25, 1895. It contains information touching the question that has heretofore been widely disputed. The death of Mr. Conner prevented the fulfillment of the task, says the Indianapolis News: "My father's family was captured by hotel were two young men whose in-have been earlier or a year or two later. the Indians about the year 1785. central Indiana in 1802, but he had nade a trip to the Wabash in 1800. He remained at his trading post until the breaking out of the war with Great Britain in 1812, when he joined the deigs, on the Maumee river, and with his brother John acted as guide and interpreter for General Harrison. He was sent by the general down the Wabash Shawness, to learn if possible their intentions and attitude in the approaching trouble with British forces. He knew Tecumthe and his brother, the Prophet, intimately. The Prophet often befriended him, and was a trustworthy friend. My father always spoke well of these Indians. He had many conversations with Tecumthe in regard to the attitude of the Indian tribes under his direction and his reasons for his adherence to the British cause, and his cooperation with that country in the war that followed. Tecumthe complained bitterly of the lack of faith on the part of the United States in regard to per-formance of treaty stipulations and contrasted it with the policy as carried out by Great Britain in its management of Indian affairs in Canada. He felt that there was no security for the Indian and clearly foresaw that the time was not distant when the Indian would possess little or no part of the domain

he had inherited from his fathers. "Tecunithe scemed to be fully away that step by step the tribes would be by the bitterness and hate of the white man. With a power warlike and aggressive as Great Britain to back and ally the Indian, he hoped to put off the final day and possibly save a remnant of his people.

"These, in part at least, were the asons that actuated him in that wonderful crusade he was making, visiting the tribes covering the country from the lakes to Arkansas. My father said he had a persuasive tengue and a power to move his fellow savages rare indeed, and he never failed to rally the red man present 9th day of November, the angry writhings were fearful to see. "He declared that he would not tolerate cruelties or predatory warfare on peaceful, noncombatant settlements of white people, but he relt it his duty to tail was coiled tightly about his leg, rally the tribes and inflame them to a point of resistance and fair warfare against the government of the United States, which had for a hundred years persistently pushed the Indians from their homes and the places which that government had assigned to them with solemn pledges that they should always retain such as their future homes, and that it would protect them from the restless greed of white pioneers.

"My father was in command of 800 friendly Indians at the battle of the Thames, in Canada. His command was attached to Colonel Paul's regiment in that battle. His Indians did some good service and contributed to the defeat of the British and Indians.

"After the battle, late in the afternoon, he was summoned to the headquarters of Colonel R. M. Johnston, who stated to him that it was the rumor that the great chief Tecumthe was among the slain in battle and requested my father to take some of his friendly Indians and search the field and ascertain cord neither of the men spoke, but it if it were indeed true. My father imwas easy to see that both knew there mediately took with him four or five Delawares and began the search, which was successful. When they found the body, some of the Indians were not sure that it was that of Tecumithe. There was a striking resemblance between the two brothers, Tecumthe and the Prophet, but one of them had a spot or defect on one of his eyes. One of the Delawares stooped down and pushed open the eyelid, and it was at once known that the dead man was indeed Tecumthe. "During the political campaign of 1840 it was universally asserted by the Democrats that 'Colonel Johnson killed Tecumthe.' My father often declared that it could not be; that an old Indian warrior and a camp follower of the ex-pedition in Canada, named Wheatley, was probably Tecumthe's slayer. He was a bitter Indian hater and a grank on that subject. He was not enrolled as a soldier, but went to the battle on his own account. He, too, was killed in the fight. Tecumthe was shot through the breast, and the wound plainly showed that he came to his death from the effects of a shot from a small bore rifle, ried. JOHN A. DEIBERT."

Christensen is this engineer's The following account of the death name. The Chicago mountain idea was evolved by him last July, when he was spending the summer in Colorado, and he brought it home with him and made a blue print of it. Mr. Christensen being the estimater for Fraser & Chalmers, the big manufacturers of mining machinery, a citizen of the United States and a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, is not to be classed among the wild eyed visionaries who have been amusing the public so many years. He is an engineer of high reputation, has perfect con-fidence in his mountain scheme and is supplied with arguments and figures to prove that it is not only practicable, but offers the opportunity for the making of several fortunes. He contemplates mountain provided with all modern ums, pavilions, flats, stores, restaurant natatoriums and stables, from which constant revenue would be derived.

Mr. Christensen's mountains, as they are pictured in the blue print, are built of steel and are hollow. They are cov ered on the inside with steel plates shaped and painted to imitate cave formations, and the lower part of the wails are clad with thin layers of real rock. There are clusters and lines of incandescent lamps arranged on the ceilings and walls to represent precious stones. and electric fountains, springs and wa terfalls to make the caves complete. The outsides of the mountains are covered with steel plates, forming pockets of many different shapes and sizes, cemented and filled with soil, in which are growing pine and fir trees, mountain shrubbery and wild flowers. The exterior of these pockets, as well as the mountain sides, are clad with layers of hollow rocks of different shapes. The general scheme of construction is very similar to that employed in skyscraper buildings, with the differen that Mr. Christensen has planned one mountain 1,000 feet high and surmounted it with a tower 500 feet higher. Above the caves are the modern cliff dwellings, built like the Chicago high buildings and divided into suitable flats and furnished with all modern improvements. The upper stories form hotels and sanitariums, and each story will have, besides elevator connection with level ground, an exit to a burro trail, which winds up and down the moun-
