The other evening while talking about medals being given to the State, a veteran said: "They are making the giving of medals to cheap—that is they are giving medals for almost every insignificant thing. What's the use of giving a medal for a thing that thousands upon thousands do?" "Medals in my view," he continued, "should be given only for special and distinguished service. I captured 2 rebel soldiers at Chancellorville and took them to General Tyler's headquarters." That was a special service, and out in Lost Creek Valley lies Lieutenant Samuel Colborn. He captured at Gettysburg in the 3rd day's fight, two rebel soldiers upon their column and ordered his men to surround him. He quickly got the drop on them with a musket and turned the command, ordered them to surrender and marched them in as prisoners of war." It was Captain McClellan who was thus relating reminiscence of the late war and giving his opinion as to what constitutes merit that should be rewarded with a medal, if medals are to be given by the State.

SCHOOL HONOR KICKERS.

The tempest in a teapot over the class honors in the schools of the town came to a boil last Thursday evening. The school board was called in to settle the troubled waters. They met in the back office of the National Bank and after hearing what was to be said by parties dissatisfied with the conferring of honors, they sustained the principal in his distribution of honors. In a popular system of Government everyone has the chance to talk as much as and as often as they please, and so many people talk and gabble for the sole purpose of furthering their own interests and ambitions, regardless of whether they have ability to talk intelligently on the subject in hand. They will take part in the talk to get what they would like to have and will take honors that they are not entitled to and cannot keep up. Talk is cheap, but it cannot put a No. 7 shoe on a No. 7 foot, and it cannot make a low grade tin a high grade. It is probable that the dissatisfied persons don't see it in that correct light. They either don't see it correctly or they want for themselves things that belong to others, or they believe the school authority that ought to know, and does know has been partial in the conferring of honors, or they are jealous of others for their success in class. The kickers have not stated which of the four things or feelings caused the dissatisfaction in their minds and prompted them to kick and kick themselves out. It may be a good thing to kick sometimes, but it should be a bed thing that one kicks at, for to kick at a good thing makes one a bad kicker, and that is dreadfully harmful, not to the person kicked at, but to the kicker. On the question of school class honors how can the street know. If honors are to be given they must rest somewhere, and the teacher knows by the grade who is entitled to the honor. The street knows no more about such things than the man in the moon. The street or public has never seen the great or small of the street or public know. The street is a good deal like Lincoln's military company, everyone of which wanted to be Captain. The street would have an honor for everyone, which would be well enough if everyone had wcn an honor, but as everyone can't be Captain in a military company and as everyone in the street cannot be an honor class man or woman so everyone in a school cannot be an honor graduate, and that is the way the Mifflintown school board looked at the tempest in a teapot that raged over the conferring of class honors. The Board saw through the tempest clearly and kept its eye on the focal point and left things as the principal of the school decided. The storm in the teapot is over and everything is as lovely as a mountain lakelet in the school, with a lesson well read to indignant kickers. It is an honorable distinction for a pupil to graduate, and all should be happy and highly gratified regardless of class honors.

Mrs. Neely and her sister Miss Jennie Banks are visiting in Harrisburg.

The Delaware Literary Society celebrated its 36th anniversary at Thompstontown on the evening of the 26th inst.

Fire destroyed a number of panels of fence on the farm of Mr. John McCrum, last Sunday. To stop the progress of the fire across his fields and to save other fences the horses and plows were put to work. Furrows were plowed around the fields and the spread of the fire in that way was stopped.

A Monster Snake Recounted.

Last Friday, April 23, Westley Heller, killed the largest snake ever encountered in Juniata county. He was taking out railroad ties on Tuscarora mountain about 2 miles from Thompstontown. Suddenly he heard movement among the bushes and the next instant a snake as large as a man's hand and 10 feet long, with its front of him. It was moving toward him, mouth open 8 or 10 inches. As it a dream, he asked in his own mind. With the instinct of desperation he took up the cross-cut saw that lay close by and as the snake came on he gave one frantic lunge. It was a short decisive battle. The head of the snake was almost cut off by the saw. The force of the oncoming snake, tumbled its ponderous body about and its tail flopped around and about him, and for a second or two he thought he was the victim of a horrid nightmare, and as he had run away some distance, and the thing did not follow him, he turned, walked back to the place of the encounter to see if he was then awake and in his sober senses. It was all too true. Such a snake as he had killed, he had never seen, and again he began to question his sober senses, and to steady himself he took a handspike and stretched the snake and took a cord and measured it around the body. The snake measured 18 feet long and 21 inches round, that is 7 inches in diameter, being as thick as the largest stove-pipe. He almost fainted. He became sick with nervous shock, and with difficulty went home and went to bed and when I. N. Bistine came through Thompstontown on Saturday morning, he said his friend was not yet able to get out of bed. The nervous shock had almost killed him. Bistine also said that Dr. Grubb and other prominent citizens were preparing to go to the mountain to bring the snake to town, and if he had seen it he would have gone with them. The narrator of the event said his friend Heller could not tell much about the snake, only its size, which has been given above, and that it is almost black.

Mr. Schlegel was the next citizen from Thompstontown, who related the dreadful experience of Heller and the nervous prostration that overtook him, after the encounter with the snake. About the time he was leaving Thompstontown, prominent citizens had raised several dollars to be given to men, who would bring the reptile from the mountain. He said the citizens down there were talking of two things about the snake: That the skin should be taken off and stuffed or that it should be preserved in alcohol. He thought taking the skin off and stuffing it would be the cheap way. It would take a hoghead of alcohol to preserve a snake of that size. Someone thought any half dozen men, who should invest in a hoghead of alcohol could easily see more than one snake 18 feet long and 7 inches thick.

The next prominent citizen from Thompstontown on Saturday, was A. B. Evans, Esq. He had heard of the snake's experience from others, and he knows Heller to be a truthful man, but he had not spoken to him, since the exciting reports prevail. He said: Other men now tell of having seen an enormous snake or two on Tuscarora mountain, but at the time they saw the snakes they said nothing, being convinced in their own minds that people would say the snakes they had seen had been magnified in their eyes by fright. By Saturday evening there was more talk about the Thompstontown snake than any other subject. The size of the reptile as mentioned everyone. Where did the monster come from? Did it come from the tropics? Was it a snake escaped from a show? Did it develop its ponderous proportions on Tuscarora mountain? If it is a Tuscarora mountain spontaneous development, others of the same size may lurk on its mountain side, a thousand feet above the valley, and some day perhaps, just as Heller did, some other citizen may have a still more desperate battle with a snake of that wild section. A snake of that size could swallow a man as easily as a garter snake as thick as a man's thumb swallows a toad five times thicker. It would be no less strange for Tuscarora mountain to spontaneously develop a snake of such a giant size than for a human body to develop a louse or for a human bed to develop a bed-bug. All that is necessary is to have the proper conditions and nature give life and development. Start an army of soldiers into active service, clean and in new clothes from the stocking to the cap on their heads. By uncleanly habits the body louse will be developed among them spontaneously and so with the bed in human habitation. A new bed in a new house under certain conditions will develop the bed bug. Where did the lice and bed bugs come from. If they were spontaneously developed through certain conditions, it would not be a difficult feat for nature to develop monster snakes in Tuscarora mountain, if all conditions be favorable for such development. S. Boyd Murray, proprietor of the National hotel, rode to Thompstontown on Sunday on his wheel to see the snake, but it had not been brought into the town, and upon the way he was fearful that by the time all things were in shape to bring the snake to town, that the warm weather of 88 degrees heat would so blot and corrupt the thing that the offensive odor arising from the carcass would render its transportation impossible. The party that went to the mountain on Sunday with Heller for the fight took place and from the place a trail spotted with blood led to a ledge of rocks of many acres in extent. There the trail ended and the belief among the searchers for the snake is that Heller cut with the saw did not kill it, only stunned it for the time being, and that when it recovered vitality enough it glided away to its den among the rocks, there probably to die, from the saw wound in the neck.
