A SPIDER FIGHT.

It Wes Fast and Furlous and to Death. I once had a spider pet of a kind the books enabled me to identify. He was a fine, big fellow. I caught him in the garden, carried him home, and for nearly two months he and I took a close interest in each other, he for the flies I introduced to him and I for the amus ment he introduced to me. I kept him in a milliner's bex, letting him out when I visited him, specially delighting myself with allowing him to drop from one hand by his fine spun thread, and then either catching him in the other or gently compelling him to climt back again by apparently cating his own ladder.

Albert Bloodgood gazed long and carnestly into his young wife's eyes. It was evident that serious doubts had taken possession of him. He had been married to Sylvia Bloodgood for three days and had thought that he was happy, but now, as she sat beside him in the saloon of the plunging steamer, a herrible thought suddenly forced itself upon him.

The sweet girl who had given her life into his keeping noticed that something was out of whack with him, and, look ing up, more as an innocent child would look at a parent than as a wife contem plating the features of her busband, she asked:

"Doesn't 'com love 'cor 'ittle darlie any more? Tell me, darling, what it is that troubles you. Don't try to conceal it from 'our 'ittle lovey dovey. You
