THE LAST BATTLE.

That there is a Divinity that shapes our ends, finds another illustration in the care of the last battle, of the Spanish war, which was fought at Manila, Philippine Islands, on the 13th of August, 1898. It was the last act that anchors the Philippines securely to the United States as part of their possession.

The war was one of surprises that cannot be explained, it is like the unexpected prosperity of one individual and the unexpected and continued misfortune of another individual, and so we came into the possession of territory that it was not dreamed of four months ago should become ours by the unquestionable title of the national force of arms.

The latest from Manila on Sunday reports the post office and custom house work going on properly under American officers. The custom dues on goods in the custom house amounts to 2,000,000 Mexican dollars, which will pay the expenses of the war on the American side one day.
