SENATOR QUAY has not availed himself of his Senatorial privilege to put off the action that has been Philadelphia. He could plead his privilege as a United States Senator and be free from the action till after the adjournment of the Senate next March. He has the right to do so under the Constitution of the United States. But he has said, go on with the suit. The State has not lost one dollar by the transaction that is charged against Senator Quay, and it remains to be shown that he was in a combination to use the State money on deposit in the People's bank in Philadelphia. Under the law that that action has been brought, how many county treasurers and township and borough tax collectors before court to answer in the same way that Senator Quay has been arraigned?
