the standard of the pulpit. Truth from Indian Lips. In a curious, lately published little book, written by one or two Omaha Indians, the following incident is told by Inshta-Theumba, the educated Christian daughter of the chief, Iron Eye. "We were out on the buffalo hunt. It was evening. The tents had been pitched for the night and the camp-fire made. I was a little bit of a thing, playing near my father. A little Indian boy came up and gave me a bird he had found. I was very much pleased, and tried to feed it and make it drink. After I had amused myself with it for some time, father said: "My daughter, bring your bird t "He beld it in his hand for a mos said, 'Daughter, I will tell you whe you might do with it. Take it carefully n your hand out there where there are no tents, where the high grass is, and put it softly down on the ground and say, "God, I give you back your little bird. Have pity on me, as I have pity on your bird."

"I said, 'Does it belong to God?" "He said, 'Yes, and He will be plea ed if you do not hurt it, but give it back Him to take care of."

world which spends as much money on little, useless frivolities as Paris. There are no women in the world who surround, smother, and burden themselves with the amount or number of tollet accessories as the French women. A stranger walking through one of the big department stores like the Bon Marche will be struck forcibly with this ract. They will see there a thousand gaudy things, the use of half of which they cannot even divine. They are all color and paste and feathers and rags, silks and fringe, and linen and lace, mock jewels, and brushes and combs and pomades, perfumes and savons and powders and braids, until the head turns giddy and the heart sick with the sights and the sounds. If a woman understook to make practical use of all these devices, from her bath out to the putting on of the last scrap of lace or knot of ribbon, she would be obliged to give up all her time to it, and would need several maids besides. She would have no time left for the cultivation of her mind, or for earning a Uving.
