HIS OWN PORTRAIT.

How an Artist Paints a Picture of Himself.

statement: It has been a common practice with artists of all ages and countries to maint their own pictures, and at the Uffizi gallery in Florence can be seen a magnificent collection of portraits of the world's great painters done by themselves. It is a coveted honor to be invited to contribute one's own portrait o this collection, for one must be emi tance, which he considered second only nent before this compliment is paid. As to that of the commanding officer; and may be easily understood, painting one's own portrait is a somewhat troublesome task, for the painter must do a good deal from memory, especially if he puts himself in an attitude which As his native name is the Sloux for is difficult to reflect in a mirror. A straightforward portrait looking out of the picture is obviously the easiest to manage, for the painter has only to place the mirror in front of him to see his model.

Triple and quadruple mirrors must e employed when the attitude is in iny way removed from full face. A profile would be more difficult to see for oneself, but a three-quarter face would be no less so, as in both cases the artist would be working from a relection of a reflection, which, to say he least of it, is a bothering condition. The looking at oneself for a long time is one of the strange and trying onditions of painting one's own porrait, for difficulties and complexities appear to grow the more one tries to grapple with them. Like the road to the tired traveler, which seems to lengthen as he goes, so the difficulties of painting oneself appear to increase ather than diminish the more one looks at oneself.

Apart from painting one's one por trait, artists largely draw from themelves, for a man can more easily asume a particular attitude than get mother person to do so. Then for details, such as a hand, arm, nose, eye the artist and a mirror supply all that s required. Another of the many uses f a mirror is to reverse the work during its progress, as reversing a drawing will often reveal an awkwardness want of balance or faulty drawing. which might otherwise go undetected -Chleago News.

On he went until he came to the shore nearest the kiln; here he stopped, evidently bothered again. There was a scarcely discernible footprint in the mud and water right at the edge of the slough, apparently the last step the deserter had taken before reaching hard ground. This footprint showed the toes, so the deserter was now barefooted. Another thing about this print was its direction; it stood at right angles to the line previously followed. Either the man had taken a sideward spring for the land from his right foot, or he had Broiling a Steak.

The broiling of steak often fills th bouse with smoke and the meat odor. In many cases this can be avoided by as simple an expedient as opening the dampers of the stove or range when the broller is put on and letting the draft carry the fumes up the chimney. A great many things that are odious in housekeeping may be avoided by "knowing how."
