ONE RESULT.

The Centennial Exhibition has already accomplished one result which none but its most sanguine friends anticipated. It has not only demonstrated to foreign manufacturers the superiority of American workmanship, but it has made them acknowledge it. The London Times recently printed a number of letters on the subject of American competition with England, written by persons whose eyes had been opened by what they saw at the great Exhibition; one of which may be taken as a sample of all. It is signed by "A Practical Man," and he says candidly: "After spending more than three months at the Philadelphia Exhibition, I return home more deeply impressed than ever with the change that has occured in the prospects of England as a manufacturing country. I have attended all the great international exhibitions since 1859, and have seen, with concern, the gradual loss of position which England has suffered, until now she finds herself closely challenged in every department of industry, and in some according to the judgement of experts, she holds the first place no longer, or holds it doubtfully. I perfectly agree with the writer of the letter which appeared in the Times of the 31st ult., over the signature of "A Manufacturer," that the Americans are on, the point of becoming our most dangerous rivals, and I indorse every statement that he makes in support of this view. I have watched closely during the last few years their rapid progress as a manufacturing people. Their spirit and enterprise are boundless. They have imported the very newest and best machinery of England. Belgium, Germany and France; they have tempted away, through agents sent over for the purpose, skilled workmen from each of these countries, giving a preference to those of England, and they are rapidly training an army of skilled workmen for themselves. I can say, from my own knowledge as a practical man, and from the statements of friends upon whom I can rely, that in the departments of iron, wool, cotton, and a certain class of silk, they can produce work which in quality is fully equal to our own. That the cost of production is greater than with us is very little to the point. That is a difficulty that will right itself. The great matter for us to note is that they can produce the article required. We may depend upon it the rest will follow in due

An eminent authority on manufactures, Iron, an English trade paper, says editorially, on the same subject; "Our great consummer is, we fear, gone forever," adding subsequently that the American railmakers will prove equal if not more than equal, to supplying the demand for repair, renewal and extensions of existing lines, and that the cheapening of production in England has been accompanied by greater proportionate reductions in the United States; that the latter will prove equal to the task of making steel rails to replace those of iron now generally in use, and that orders for this class of goods can only go to England in case of sudden emergency. It regards this branch of trans-atlantic trade as almost extinct, views with regret the closing of an important outlet for British Bessemer steel, but adds, "the facts are too plain to admit of any illusion."

The Times devotes one of its heavy The Times devotes one of its heavy leading articles to a critique on the letters of its correspondents, in which it says: "That the American population of the American population of the Count of the county of Susquehanna, will expose at public sale on the premises in Brooklyn Township, on Friday, November 10th, 1876, enjoy an extraordinary gift of mechanical skill we have had many proofs, and it is not surprising that this skill, foster ed by a policy of protection, and combined with the advantages of a high standard of intelligence secured by systematic education, has given native born Americans a great start in manufacturing industry. The capacity, however, to produce excellent articles for sale is not sufficient to make a great commercial

What the last sentence means is not perfectly clear; but as the article in question was written before the editor of the Times sailed for this country, it is probable that he will either explain or withdraw it on his return.) Mr. Walter has come to the United States to visit the Centennial Exhibition, and will probably make a tour through the country before he sails for home, and he is too intelligent a man, as well as too good a friend of America, to close his eyes to the evidenctes of our "capacity," as well as skill that will be everywhere presented to him. le will also have an opportunity to com-Pure his views on the subject, of protection with the actual results of the adop- Apractical horseshoer can find employment by calling on or writing to the undersigned at Fairdale, Sustion of that system, as displayed here. quehanna County, Pa. At present he says:

"We differ from another writer, whose letter on this subject we published on Saturday, in not holding that the excellence of the arricle produced is sufficient for this end. The first consideration is whether the goods manufactured are wanted at a price which will remunerate the producers for the time and capital ed as ionows to wit: Beginning at a ocean in line of land surveyed to Rome L. Potter, thence east of spent in their production. Under the perches to road, thence north 2 rods, thence west 15 system of protection this latter result is secured to the United States manufacture. European economists hold that the price of this advantage is a great pecuniary sacrifice on the part of the nation; but that under the guarantee of a system of protection capital may be the south by land of Ziba Lafrance, andfon the cast by land of Nathan-Green and land of Samuel Tewksbury. profitably invested in the establishment containing 116 acres, about 80 acres improved, with the appurtenances 1 frame house. I frame barn and shed of manufactures such as those which and 2 orchards. [Setzed and taken in execution at the have sprung up in the United States has never been disputed. The practical question is what will be the state of things when the public begin to estimate the cost of protection. The letters to which we have referred present a graphic picture of the collapse which this system has already undergone, and if the opinion of other writers is correct, then protection as a system in the United States is doomed. American manufacturers must be prepared to consider the future as one not of monopoly, as hitherto, but of unrestricted competition. This is just what the promoters of English commerce have always looked forward to."

Doubtless the promoters of English commerce have looked torward to a state of things which would give them an opportunity to fill foreign ports with English goods; but certainly the promoters of American industry have cherished no such dream. If they had, a glance at their English brethren, whom all their immense wealth and unlimited resources for cheap labor and material cannot keep from bankruptcy, would be enough to dispel it. Absolute free trade will be universally beneficial only when all the countries of the world are in the same stage of progress and when all mutually agree to establish it. Until mutually agree to establish it. Until then, England finds herself in a losing condition as compared with every other manufacturing nation, and presents in the poverty of her working classes and the expense of her enforced charities a practical illustration that, whatever may be "the cost of production," the cost of free trade to the masses of the people is something fearful to contemplate. The Centennial Exhibition has already opened her eyes to the superiority of American manufactures; perhaps it will also open them to the superiority of the American system of encouraging manufactures. system of encouraging manufactures.
