Evidently his fellow-members of the New York Bar are not disposed to "count out" Mr. Tilden from their association. Out of a possible vote of 112, he received 100 on his re-election as Vice-President of that body, at their late election a few days since.

Tilden's majority on the popular vote was more than 250,000, and his real majority of the electoral vote not less than eighteen and yet four of the most miserable of all God's creatures, in Louisiana, claim the right to render those majorities inoperative.

The Semi-Colon in Politics.

Mr. Andrew J, Harper, of Harmony, Pa., sends the Pittsburg Post the following apt illustration of the importance of correct punctuation, which may be applied to any two representative men of two parties, and which, by the mere placing of the semi-colon, reads to suit both. We place it in double column, differently punctuated, so that the omnipotent power of the insignificant little semi-colon may he more readily seen. It will be noticed that there is not the change of a single word, and yet the two columns express views as directly opposite as it is possible to express them in words. By way of illustration, we may make the two distinguished Senators from Ohio stand as the representatives of their reepective parties, and we will allow our Radical readers to change the column if they so disire:
