An Eastern Parable.

CLOSED IN HEAVEN, SHUT ON EARTH. Lattof was a poor man who lived in the king's capital. He was very poor, many plans for improving his circumoften wondered why it was that others succeeded better in the world, but somehow he could never get more than barely what sufficed for his daily necessities.

One night when he had fallen asleep, thinking over all his difficulties, he had a remarkable dream.

the thing that struck him particularly, · as he walked about in the upper world, was this, that the floor on which he trod was all perforated with holes of different

He summoned up courage to accost these holes.

"There," said the angel, "are the openings through which the bounties of heaven descend upon the inhabitants of the earth. And whereas some of them. as you see, are of a great size; these are the passages for the supply of those who are on earth called rich and prosperous, for they receive a large share of heaven's good things. And whereas others, as you see, are smaller; these are the openings for the lots of men in humbler station, each one receiving according to the size of the hole assigned to him."

"And could you not show me the opening of my lot?" said Lattof with some eagerness.

"Come this way," said the angel, "and you shall see it."

So he led the way for some distance, and indicated a very small opening-it seemed as small as a pin point,—and Lattof understood that that represented the

His work was proceeding slowly and satisfactorily, when, to his great misfortune, he gave his fincausing him great pain; so he cried out in his sleep, "Oh, oh! alas, alas! murder!"

Now it happened that at that moment the nightwatch was passing Lattof's door and hearing such cries, they burst open the door to see the cause of the alarm, and found Lattof in bed, pretending, as they thought, to be as leep.

"You are a cunning sellow, too," they said; "come, get up, and tell us what is this you are about?"

The poor man, what between his strange dream and the sudden appearance of the policemen, did not well know what to say and of course he was marched off to

In the morning he was brought before the Agha of the police; and when the house at the dead of night, he was ordered to give an account of himself.

Now all he could tell was the story of his dream, as we have related it; but the Agha looked upon that as a tale concocted to conceal some dreadful crime, and ordered him to be kept under arrest till an examination could be made.

Still no trace of murder could be found in Lattor's house, nor was any person reported as murdered, and when questioned repeatedly, he adhered to the same tale of his wonderful dream.

Now the king was in the habit of inquiring for all the news of the day, and among other things told him to beguile the time, was the story of Lattof, in which he was so interested that he ordered the man to be brought before him.

The king was satisfied, on inquiry, that Lattof was a simple-minded fellow, and had compassion on him in his pover-

I do not know what it was—whether a beam of wood overhead, or a telegraph wire, or a stone archway; but something was right in the path of the stone that it rebounded on Lattof's head and laid him dead on the ground.

Carrots for Horses and Cattle,

No food of the root kind is so keenly relished by horses as carrots; indeed, most horses preter them to oats. Carrots, when mixed with chaff without corn, will keep horses in excellent condition for performing all kinds of labor. They may be fed from December to the beginning or middle of May, to which period, with proper care in this latitude, they may be preserved. In certain parts of Europe farmers depend solely upon carrots, with a proper allowance of hay, as winter food for their horses, without giving them any grain whatever; and it is asserted that by this mode of feeding farm horses a considerable saving of hay is effected, as compared with the usual custom of the country of feeding corn and hay. Draft and farm horses are given in the proportion of fifty or sevenmay be preserved. In certain parts of for though industrious, he was always is effected, as compared with the usual having some misfortune. He made custom of the country of feeding corn stances, but they always miscarried. He given in the proportion of fifty or seventy pounds weight each of carrots per day on an average, not allowing them quite so many in the very short days, and sometimes more than that quantity in the spring months. A portion of the carrots are sliced in the cut chaff or hay, the rest are given whole to the horses at night, He thought he was in heaven; and with a moderate quantity of hay, in their racks; and with this food the horses usually enjoy uninterrupted health. Without reference to the many local opportunities of a market for the sale of the carrot, it is the most valuable esculent in the entire range of practical husbandry on account of its superior properties as a general article of food for several descriptions of animals usually kept on a farm. The only reasonable objection urged against the more general introduction of carrots into the general system of cropping is their expensive and tedious early culture, which objection certainly has considerable weight, Nevertheless when capital and industry can be combined, carrots offer a fairer opportunity for a remunerative return than any comparative crop, and where introduced will be found a valuable article of food supply of Heaven's blessings he received. for horses, pigs and poultry of all de-Now," thought he, "if the angel scriptions. In establishments for trotting or racing horses, carrots are especially beneficial. Toward spring when the horses have been fed many months on dry food—oats, ger a sudden turn and wrenched off the corn and hay—they are extremely sernail, thus not only filling the hole but | viceable, indeed, necessary. Among horsemen they have gained the character of being good for the wind; but we suspect the only merit they can claim in this respect is they keep the body cool and properly open, by which they conduce greatly to health and condition, and consequently to clearness of wind.

About the same thing may be said of their claims to producing a fine coat; whatever conduces to health does so; consequently carrots do. To any one who has been in a racing stable, or any stable where carrots are fed, it may seem almost useless to say that they should be sliced in pretty long slices. It is dangerous to give them cut crossways, as horses are extremely fond of them, and, if at all greedy, would be apt to bolt pieces of them whole, at the LOWEST PRICES. Promptly upon watchmen had recounted how they had which would be quite likely to cause heard the cries of murder within his some of them to stick in the throat. Carrots, it kept in a dry place, in sand, will keep a long time, or, in sand, they will keep out of doors, if covered sufficiently with straw and then banked up with earth.—National Live Stock Journal.

Apples for Cows.

Those farmers who fed apples freely to their cows and other stock last fall have found them very useful in increasing the quantity of milk, and many think they have improved the quality also. At the meeting of the Board at Worcester there was a general expression of opinion in favor of the practice and its ecomomy. Many thought the apples were worth 121 cents a bushel for this purpose, and no one put them less than 10 cents, and from that to 15. We think they are worth at least 10 cents a bushel to feed out, and that is far better than to let them rot on the ground. But they ought them rot on the ground. But they ought to be fed out when mature, when they are ripe enough to eat, when their sugar is elaborated. It does not follow that tehy should be mellow enough to suit us, but they should at least be ripe.
