WHY BIDDY AND PAT MARRIED.

'Oh, why did you marry him, Biddy? Why did you take Pat for your spouse? Sure he's neither purty nor witty, And his hair is as red as a cow's!

Laziness was his foible. He had that unpleasant quality in its supreme condition. The throne of indolence was vacant on our coast

He spared himself all the fatigue possible to mortality, and overcame labor by constantly lying in wait for "a litt" as he called it.

His dilatory habits rose sometimes to the audacity of genius. He could consume more hours in going a mile to the village post-office

It having come to the ears of the United States officials at this point that Big English, the bootblack, had a handful of lead nickles in his possession, the boy was yesterday interviewed on the subject.

"Yes; I've got nineteen bad nickles in my trousers pocket," was the prompt reply. "And what are you doing with them?"
