MONTROSE, PA., MAY 2, 1877.

THE WEEK.

All eyes are now turned toward Europe in anticipation of a general conflict into which all the different powers are likely to be drawn sooner or later. Russia, who seems to be the prime mover in precipitating a conflict, has concluded not to make any farther advances for a few days. The Bucharest correspondent of the London Times says the action of the Russian authorities in closing the navigation of the Danube certainly indicates understanding with Austria, as it is highly improbable such a step would have been undertaken against: Austria's views.

The Russians do not appear to intend to push rapidly westward. It is apparent that their operations will be undertaken leisurely in Western Roumania or confined entirely in the lower Danube. It is bringing forth of grimmy corpses in the probable that the Turks will be afforded | cage; next day a great funeral that shook an opportunity of reflecting on their isolated and dangerous position before they are called upon to stake their fortunes on a decisive battle.

There was much excitement in the Produce Exchange, in New York, 25th inst., owing to the marked advance in the price of all grades of wheat flour. The advance on the lower grades was from 25 to 35 cents per barrel, and on the higher were imprisoned behind a column of grades from 45 to 50 cents. The increase was a continuation of a strong feeling in the market that had prevailed for the past four weeks. The best grades are now from $2.75 to $3.25 per barrel higher than the prices of four weeks ago, while on the lower grades an advance of from $1.75 to $2 in four weeks is noted. The dealers attribute the strength in the market to the shortness of the last wheat crop, the anticipated war in Europe, and the manipulations of speculators who have been buying and holding flour. It made to open communication with a is regarded as a somewhat curious circum- group of the men-five in number; the stance that the advance in flower has not other four having wandered away to other been accompanied by a proportionate increase in the price of unground wheat. One of the dealers said that quotations could not be long kept up to the present tomb, guided only by their knockings figures; but he was confident that every from the gloom. As the rescuers worked war rumor from Europe would be taken advantage of by the speculators to force up prices. The demand, he thought, was not so much greater than the supply, as some of the speculators would have the public believe. The bakers claim that the increase in the price of flower especially works to their disadyantage, as they are obliged to sell bread, cakes, and pies at the same prices as they did when flour

There was a sharp upward turn in the stock market at the close of last week's ousiness. The late outslaught of speculators upon the leading railrord securities appears to have spent its force. Pennsylvania railroad stocks closed on Saturday at 37a37 and Reading at 124a13. Gold oscaliates between 106 a107 d. The bank statements show a rapid accumulation of legal tenders and deposits and a contraction of loans. The indications are favorable for improved business on every hand.

The failure of the large metal and hardware house of May & Co., was an--nounced in Boston on Saturday afternoon. Their liabilities are set down at $600,000. The failure is more prrticularly noticeable in this state as a large portion of their indebtedness is said to be due to Philadelphia creditors. The fail--ure results from bad debts and shrinkage of stocks on hand.

Senator William G. Brownlow died in Knoxville Tenn., on Sunday last. He was known more generally as the "fighting parson."

Adjutant Generat Latta has issued a circular order directing active preparation for the coming fall inspections.-There will be no mobilization of the entire force, but the divisions will be respectively inspected and will continue as organizations until after the completion of the inspections. The high standard so generally attained will call for the operation of stringeut rules where compauses are in anywise lacking in comparison with their fellows and a summary disposition of all such delinquents.

It his been decided that our government, as soon as officially informed of the war in the East, must issue a proclamatrue to the best of my knowledge and belief, tion of neutrality, and that all arms shipped to the combatants after that event will be at the risk of the shippers.

The town of Pohi has been hombarded and burned by the Torks.

A Pathetic Story of Welsh Fortitude.

The London correspondent of the Herald says: It may not be surprising to learn that the attention of England has been turned during the week from these gatherings of armies in the East and directed to a little hamlet in South Wales. It is not hard to find in human nature the reason for this. The looming war, with all its probabilities of slaughter, of desolated homes, of widows and orphans by the hundred thousand, had only been regarded in the popular mind through diplomatic lenses. The war was still a game of chess, but suffering, brought to the people's doors, as it were, by the aid of the newspapers, caught the sympathies of the million. It was the story of a disaster at the collieries. Cores of such calamities to the men who work 'way down in the dark, taking their lives by hundreds at a time, have occurred within the last few years in England, and the horrors of them have arrested attention for a day or two. They were stories of sudden catastrophes; a low subterranean rumbling heard; a column of smoke rising into the air; the gathering of white faced women and children at the pit's mouth; after some hours the the whole country side with its passionate grief, and then all over. All over in two or three days. But there at Pontypridd there was a prolonged agony. The correspondents of the morning and evening papers poured into London's great ear hour by hour the intensity of the elfort and suspense that hung around the Troedyrhlw colliery until London could think or speak of nothing else.

An explosion, followed by an inundation, occurred ten days ago. Nine men coal 120 feet thick, which had fallen with the first shock. There was a mystery about their fate, but the warm hearts of the South Whales colliers decided swiftly that if sturdy arms could unravel that mystery ere too late, it should be done. Work was begun and willing hands were superabundant. Night and day toil was unremitting, and so it went for a week before the first ray of hope was given to the toilers. As the time rolled on the interest grew, and London held its breath in anxiety to learn the fate of the imprisoned or entomed. At length on Thursday last sufficent progress had been parts of the mine. Now came the awful moment. Brave, tireless, ceaseless and sleepless, the rescuers worked inch by inch, to their brethren in the living onward the voices of the men in the dark could be heard singing their Cymric by one, weak, but still alive, the five men were borne on brawny arms to the light of day. This was Friday afternoon. Hundreds of thousands all over the land wept with joy. In London the excitement knew no bounds. The home secretary was questioned in the Hou e of Commons to know if the news was authentic; the Queen telegraphed down to Wales for a confirmation; crowds gathered around the newspaper bulletins; the papers are full of praise of the bravery of the rescuers, the details of the rescue and the strong endurance of the men who were saved. The Welsh bravery of the last week will be sung in the Eistedfodds of the Cymri for ages.
