

THE COMING PASTOR

A pastor wanted—one to please the people. Our church, expensive and designed with skill. Embellished with a mortgage and a Gothic steeple—

LOVE IN A COFFIN.

"AMETHYSTS! Oh, Rex, how good you are! Such beauties, too! I never in my life had so lovely a gift."

"Well, you know they always liked each other," Travers said, with an air of charming candor, "though nobody tho't there was anything between them before you were married."

can't alter matters now between me and Percy. "I shall go, Lucy. You need not tell him any sooner for this. It is too late for anything to change me. I hate him, I think, to-night more than I ever loved him—and that would be hard indeed. You know how I loved him."

Four men slowly and reverently brought in the package and set it down in the wide hall. "It was a large box. 'Not there; in there,' motioned Rex, with his ashy lips. Not a sound came. The men obeyed, and bore their burden into the room beyond."

Begone thou worse than viper!" With bowed head Travers had listened to these words, and now abashed and degraded, he turned and walked from the spot without a word.
