Education of Farmers.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE FARM JOURNAL. -It is a curious inqury why the knowledge of agriculture progresses so slowly; and why it has as yet attained so little in this Country. It is a fact which we are all willing to concede, that our productions are little more seem to be content to bide our time, and be satisfied with results, when accident or change shall produce them, or when we shall be jostled from the old way, by the coming gener-

More than seven hundred years before the Christian era, Isaiah prophetically speaks of a country dealers that when, as is often the case threshing machine. Behold, I will make ale becomes stale before half the barrel is out. thee a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth.' And yet this intimation pointing out almost the very structure of the machine now in so common use, was not realized until the nineteenth century; and then received with a doubting caution that well nigh dampened the experiment. The merchant has carried his enterprize into every nook and corner of the known world; the learned have exerted their talents to the developement and practical application of scientific princi-ples, which has given their class an enviable place in the estimation of mankind; the me-chanic, availing himself of these developements of science, has given them form and shape to an extent which entitles them to the admiration of the world; while the farmer stands to gaze with mingled feelings of doubt and astonishment, that all the other pursuits of life whirl so rapidly past him.

What is the remedy for this admitted evil We answer—the education of farmer's sons through the medium of an agricultural school We mean a school to educate boys in the art and science of farming; and unless the farmers of our State will zealously embrace this idea, and avail themselves of it, there is no hope that their condition can be otherwise improved but by the lapse of time, and happening of circumstances.

There is no one of the colleges of this country adapted to instruct a farmer; on the contrary their system is calculated to educate young men to a state of entire unfitness for any such occupation. A boy graduated at one of our literary institutions has already spent that part of his life which alone can be profitably employed to learn the art of farming; and science without art, is still worse than art without science. There are peculiar reasons why farmers should take up this subject and make it their own. It is a fact with regard to the system upon which literary institutions are at present based, that their pecuniary resources are never adequate to their necessities, however economical they may be. The consequence of this is that education is made to cost more than they, who rely upon the produce of a farm, are able to pay. Besides, if this expence should. have been undergone, the farmer has in all probability driven his son from all taste or desire to pursue the calling for which his ma-turer judgement intended him. And if the boy should return to the farm, it is to exhibit to his disappointed father and brothers -how little he knows of the business of his fu-

In an Agricultural School the pupils are all laborers on the farm as well as in their study; their bodies are educated to the art and their minds to the science of farming; whilst their hands are employed in the work of the firm, their minds are employed in the pursuit of the knowledge of the reasons for what they do; there is thereby an intermingling of theoretical science and practical art, which is but to be continued through the whole of their future lives. The Institution thus becomes, in a measure, self-sustaining; and the price of education may be reduced to a mere

(From the Germantown Telegraph.) Stirring the Soil,

Ma. Enror: - Experience has long satisfied me that frequent stirring of the soil, is a preventive, to a very great extent, of the ordinary effects of drought. I do not, of course, wish to be understood as including the doctrine that it will render rain unnecessary, for this would be to deny Providence; but that it enables the farmer to derive important benefits from his soil, at times and in seasons when the windows of heaven appear to be literally closed, and the earth languisheth for the kindly and life-imparting rain. A surface that is kept constantly fine and light, does not allow the moisture beneath to exhale, and it is thus rendered available for the use and nourishment of

By passing the cultivator through a cornfield once a week, the crop will be secured against the effects of drought much more effectually thanby any other means that can be adopted. As the soil falls together, and bebecomes consolidated, the moisture ascends by capillary attraction, and escapes to the clouds. Every one must have noticed this in solid lands, and even in corn-hills. where owing to a practice prevalent in some sections of the country, and which is almost invariable with those who till light, sandy soils, the hoe is stamped down upon the soil immediately over the corn in planting. The compresse earth is always moist in the morning, while the spaces between thehills remain dry because uncompressed. As the supply of moisture in the soil fails, the mark of the hoe becomes less and less apperent, and finally no humidity is seen, On digging down, it will be perceived that the fluid is exhausted, while in the spaces between the rows, where the surface has all the time been light and fine, and dry, there is moisture enough often within an inch of the surface. I have frequently been surprised on observing the effects of this on lands, and have alluded to it frequently in my communications to various papers, and in some in-stances, not without benefit, I hope, to those for whose especial colightenment they were insended. The cultivator, were it useless for every other purpose, which it certainly is not, would be invaluable for the assistance it reuders in this.

All crops require moisture. No matter All crops require moisture. No matter how rich the soil may be in elementary mai-ters constituting the food of plants, water
