

glad, and I awoke; and then I cried all to myself, for it was only a dream.

The last words said very mournfully, and with a drooping of Mary's head, until the tear gemmed lash lay close upon her cheeks. Another period of deep silence followed; for the oppressed listeners gave no utterance to what was in their hearts. Feeling was too strong for speech. Nearly five minutes glided away and then Mary whispered the name of her father, but without opening her eyes.

Morgan answered and bent down his ear. "You will only have mother left," she said, "only mother. And she cries so much when you are away."

"I won't leave her, Mary, only when I go to work," said Morgan whispering back to the child; and I'll never go out at night any more."

"Yes, you promised me that."

"And I'll promise more."

"What, father?"

"Never to go into a tavern again."

"Never."

"No never. And I'll promise still more."

"Father?"

"Never to drink a drop of liquor as long as I live."

"O father! dear, dear father!"

And with a cry of joy Mary started up, and flung herself upon his breast. Morgan drew his arms tightly around her, and sat with his lips pressed to her cheek, while she lay against his bosom as still as death. As they lay thus, when the father unclasp'd his arms the spirit of his child was with the angels of the resurrection.—Arthur's ten nights in a lair.

Importation of Felons.

There is an abundant evidence that several, if not most, of the European marshes have been set on foot for the purpose of exporting their felons to our shores. By this, they effect two objects, 1. Get rid of the most dangerous and burdensome class of their subjects; 2. Execute or keep alive prejudice against Republics among their better disposed subjects, whom they wish to retain at home; by multiplying murders and other crimes in this country, and so diffusing the belief that Liberty leads naturally to outrage and insecurity. The following are well ascertained, is a correct translation of an official Circular widely disseminated through Belgium:

CHATELAIN.

No. 1, 893, Lisbon, (Belgium), March 18, 1854. Agents for the United States

Disposition.

The transports for emigrants for the United States will take their departure from Antwerp. A large number of vessels are prepared already to leave at various periods of this month. A certain number of liberated prisoners from Villemore, and from several provinces, (deport de mendicants) are on the point of departing.

The price of the passage, all expenses included, is 180 francs, which sum should be paid in advance at the bureau of the Government of the Province.

I beg of you to let me know as soon as possible if your district has any passengers to be forwarded.

Each individual should be sent to the jail (maison d'arret) of Antwerp, and have in his possession a simple certificate on the following model:

"The Burgomaster of the district of Province of Liege, (Belgium), certifies that (give the age, place of birth, parentage) is unmarried.

The departure will take place during the year, every fortnight.

The Commissary of the Arrondissement, Tu. FRENCH.

To the Burgomaster and Council of—

We would suggest to our honest and respectable Adopted Citizens, who are especially beloved by them to watch (through their friends remaining in Europe) and expose every attempt to flood our ports with European criminals and paupers. The burden must be borne by us all, but the adopted Citizens are subjected to an undue share of being exposed to peculiar reproach and obloquy because of these cargoes of iniquity and mendacity so unworthy thrust upon us. Will they not act as—

N. J. Tribune.

THE THREE NEW TERRITORIES.—Some time ago we mentioned that the national administration had issued a plan for organizing three new territorial governments in the Indian country south of Kansas, to consist generally of the counties of the Cherokee, in one territory, the Creek in another, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw in a third. This plan it was stated on the authority of a person who had just returned from the Chickasaw nation, had been sent out to be canvassed by the tribes concerned, and who, under that name, to be constituted citizens of the United States.

At the last session of the Senate a bill was presented by Mr. Johnson, of Arkansas, which embodied the features of this scheme, and which, though it was not acted on, will probably form a subject of discussion at Washington next winter. This bill proposes with the assent of the tribes named, to extend over them the constitution and laws of the Union, and to organize three territories, of which the Indians are to be recognized as citizens. The title of the first of these will be Chickasaw, and will include the Cherokee, Osage, Seneca, Shawnee, and Quapaw.

The title of the second is to be Muscogee, and will include the Creek and Seminole tribes, and the third is named Chahita, and will include the Choctaw and Chickasaw.

It seems probable that action was only delayed upon this scheme in Congress in order to allow time to secure the consent of all the tribes designated. Efforts are now being made to this end, and will be the next session.

The bill will vest the passage of the bill.

The Boston Farmer (Dem.) of Aug. 24th, has the following morsel on the Lachanour pardon.

"The apostles of Gov. Bigler, in the not required. How is it? Gov. Bigler, in the pardon, says that this man was improperly convicted upon the testimony of a 'fellow' who was not entitled to credit. In other words, he bases the pardon upon the ground of innocence. Now we ask any sensible man if it is reasonable to suppose for a moment that Gov. Bigler believed Lachanour innocent, he would release him from 12 days confinement, and have a fine of $200, resting upon him? Not a bit of it. He has a 'fellow and free pardon,' and although the Sheriff has been prosecuted for the fine, we wish our readers to mark our prediction, that Lachanour will never pay it. The county had been robbed—the robbers are Gov. Bigler and the persons who recommended the pardon."

Our neighbor of the Union must be mistaken in saying that "so long as the Clayton amendment was retained, the Governor, we believe, was opposed to the passage of the Nebraska bill." We say must be mistaken, because the Clayton amendment is precisely the same as a provision in the compromise measures of 1850, relating to the territories then organized; which measures the Governor has uniformly approved, in every part from the time of their passage to the present moment.—Keynote.

The N. Y. Tribune, on account of the pressure of the times, the falling off of advertising, and the increased price of paper has slightly reduced its size.

The Susquehanna Register.

H. H. FRAZIER AND THEO. SMITH, EDITORS.

MONTROSE, PA.
Thursday, September 7, 1854.

WHIG STATE TICKET.

Governor,
JAMES POLLOCK, of Northumberland.
Canal Commissioner,
GEORGE DARSIE, of Allegheny.
Judge of Supreme Court,
DANIEL M. SMYSER, of Montgomery.

V. B. PALMER, the American Newspaper Agent is the only authorized Agent for this paper in the cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia.

Pollock Endorsed by the Free Democracy!

Our readers will recollect that a Free Democratic State Convention assembled at Harrisburg, August 30th, to consider the course to be pursued by the friends of freedom in this crisis. That Convention, representing the Free Democracy of the whole State, solemnly declared that Governor Bigler, from his position on the Slavery and Temperance questions, is unworthy of support, and that James Pollock's position, on both these great questions, is satisfactory. The Convention, therefore, with the consent of Mr. Potts, withdrew his name as a candidate for Governor, and recommended the Free Democracy of the State to support Pollock. They believe that the Nebraska question is an issue in this election, and act accordingly. The Resolution and correspondence of the Convention, appear in another column.

A Queer Convention.

On Monday last what purported to be a Democratic County Convention was held in Montrose. Nothing that we have recently witnessed, has more plainly evinced the existence of that spirit before which the wire-pullers are shaking in their shoes. The Convention was evidently got up with much care and precaution. In several of the townships, probably in most of them, the test question to voters at the delegate elections was, "Bigler or anti-Bigler." The delegates regularly elected for Choconut township, were thrown out of the Convention, the allegation against one of them being that he was "anti-Bigler," and in addition, that he voted for the Tamperer candidate for Representative last fall, which, according to the straight-faced party men who controlled the Convention, was an act of treason. Bigler, or made him a "mugger," though he declared himself a Democrat. We did not hear that there was any objection to the other one, unless it was that a Whig, whom the Nebraskaites had brought to the polls—just as they tried to do in Montrose—was permitted to vote, and so vitiated the election. At any rate, the Choconut delegates were thrown out, the purity of the party was vindicated, and independence was rewarded. Thus purified—but still retaining among its delegates men who were strong Whigs some two years ago, and whose chief claim to the name of Democracy now consists in open advocacy of the Nebraska bill and its supporters—the Convention proceeded to business. And didn't they nominate a mongrel ticket! Bigler men and anti-Bigler men, Nebraskaites and anti-Nebraskaites mixed together in promiscuous confusion.

Our Country, Present and Prospective.

We have examined with some care, "Gaston and Johnson's New Map of our Country," just published, and in our opinion it is the very best we have ever seen. It gives our present boundaries, including the late territorial purchase from Mexico—the newly organized territories of Kansas and Nebraska—all the railroads completed and contemplated—defines the boundaries of every county in each State—and in general accuracy is much superior to any other of the new maps of our country with which we have become acquainted. The following recommendation is from one well qualified to judge:

"Having been employed for a long time as draughtsman in the General Land Office at Washington, and having carefully examined all the different Maps of the United States up to the present date, in my estimation there are none that in point of accuracy can compare with Gaston & Johnson's New Map of our Country."

JAS. P. McLEAN, Civil Engineer.
Washington, July 21, 1854.

Mr. Baldwin, the agent, proposes to invade this and some of the adjoining counties to make sale of the above Map, and our readers may therefore have an opportunity to examine it and judge of its merits for themselves.

We observe that the report of the Governor's remarks on the Nebraska question, in Fulton county, which appeared originally in the Valley Spirit, is widely copied in papers of all parties in this State, as containing a plain statement of Bigler's position, from his own mouth. Would it be too much to ask the Montrose Democrat to follow the example of the Luzerne Union, and other staunch Democratic sheets, and lay that report, together with the Keynote's comments thereon, before its readers? It might do good, in more ways than one.

THE GOVERNOR AND THE SLAVERY QUESTION.

Governor Bigler, with all his pro-slavery antecedents, after having recommended to the State Legislature the enactment of laws favoring the institution of slavery, after having used his influence to prevent the voice of Pennsylvania being given through her Legislature against the Nebraska bill, after having tacitly assented to the assertion made by all the leading papers of his party that he is in favor of it, and the Democratic State Committee have prepared under his supervision and published to the world an address in favor of it, and finally, after he has himself declared, in a public speech, as reported by one of his own partisans, J. M. Cooper, Esq., editor of the Valley Spirit, that he approved the Nebraska bill, and would defend it, as founded on the great principle of self-government—Governor Bigler, we say, with such antecedents, made a speech in Montrose, last week, which the editor of the Montrose Democrat, who claims to be a strong anti-Nebraska man, admits "has taken away all reasonable cause of complaint from any quarter." After such an assertion, from what purports to be the party organ in this section, it is worth while to examine, with some care, what the Governor said here, and see on what sort of a foundation the assertion is based. Whoever reads the report of his speech, can hardly fail to perceive its striking similarity to address No. 3, of the Democratic State Committee, a document which that well-known Democratic paper, the Bradford Reporter, justly characterizes in the following terms:

"It endeavors with a disingenuous wretchedness of the daylighter who wrote it to confound the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always use, a great pretension of patriotism, a love of the Union, and an apprehension of disunion. While it carefully skulks the true question, and the honest indignation of Freemen at the violation of a National compact, with the treatable acts of abolitionists. It employs the same dirty game which those who do the disgraceful work of slavery always