opinion, and that its belief is one of the great hindrances, to the improvement of our domestic animals, I shall venture at least to give my own view upon the subject.

If as a general thing: two sheep weighing 60 lbs, each can be keet on the same amount of food and yield equal returns to one weighing 120 lbs., or two cows weighing 600 each, to one weighing 1200, it offers to say the least, but very little inducement for increasing the weight of our domestic animals. On the other hand, if the heavier animal will consume little more than the smaller one and as a consequence, gives a far greater profit, then it is certainly for the interest of the farmer to select the heavier animal. The view I take of the subject is this : that the amount of food required by animals depends much upon their form, and that size alone is no just criterion to decide the amount of food they will consume. It is much with the animal as with our dwellings. A large room, if well enclosed, may be warmed with less fuel than a smaller one more exposed .---Food is the fuel used by the animal to keep up the heat of the system, and is it at all unreasonable to suppose that animals of equal size may be so constituted as to require far different amounts of food ? It certainly seems to me that all who have kept domestic animals must, on reflection, be fully aware that this is the case. Observe, for instance, a span of horses—as farmers are usually more attentive to these than their other animals, and besides they are generally selected for nearly the same size. The one often consumes much more food than the other, and at the same time the one that consumes least will more frequently be found in the best condition. Some two years since I wintered two cows that presented a very marked contrast as to size, the one weighing some 700 Ibs. and the other full 1,500. The man who had charge of my stock repeatedly assured me that the smaller one ate full one-third the most-but presuming that she ate as much is enough for our present purpose. I wish to be distinctly understood, that I claim that size (weight) has far less to do with the amount of food consumed than form. What, then, are the general characteristics of our domestic animals that require the less food? I propose to briefly answer this guestion as regards cattle; and, as nearly all our domestic animals approach in some degree to uniformity, it may be generally applicable to the general varieties.

In selecting an easy feeder, choose an animal with fine bones, round ribs, reaching well back to the hip-broad and level back-full in the brisket and round the girth-the skin (when the animal is in good store condition) loose, mellow, and yielding easily to the touch. These are the most prominent points which indicate an easy , feeder, and such as can be readily observed and understood with little experience + Woool Grower.

PRESERVING BUTTER.-The farmers of Aberdeen, Scotland, are said to practice the following method of curing butter, which gives it a great superiority over that of their neighbors :- "Take two quarts of the best common salt, one ounce of sugar, and one ounce of common saltpetre : take one ounce of this composition for one pound of butter, work it well into the mass, and close it up for use.- | from 75 cents to $15,00. The California Snake-Bird.

Alexander S. Taylor, of Montercy, in hi Familiar Sketches of the Natural History of California, says that in the coast counties of Southern California, there exists a singular species of bird, generally called on account of ts well-known morthl aversion to all members of the snake tribe, the snake bird.' It is not a bird of prey, but lives entirely on grain, like the gallingcia. When full grown measures two feet from the tip of its tail to the tip of its beak. The tail has four or five long feathers tipped with white. Its feet arc furnished with our toes, two in front and two behind, and all are guarded with sharp, DEALERS IN DRY GOODS, Groceries, Crockery, needle like claws. The color of the hird is a Hardware. Leather, Flour, etc., corner of Turnneedle-like claws. The color of the bird is a mottled, yellowish gray, and it rarely attains the weight of a pound. Its beak is, two and a half inches long, and hard and sharp. When the bird finds a rattlesnike, and rattlesnakes are to be found in great numbers in Southern are to be found in great numbers in Southern California, wherever the ground is covered by the cactus plant-it immediately proceeds, by the cactus plant - it immediately proceeds, with the greatest caution and dispatch, to DEALERS IN DRY GOODS, Drugs, Medicines, gather the fallen cactus fruit and dry lobes, Iron, Clocks, Watches, Jewelry, Silver Spoons, Perand corral him to the height of a foot or more-the spikes and spines of the plant, strong and sharp as needles, serving as antin-
