He opens his life of Lord Charman thus:

"There is hardly any man in modern times, with the exception, perhaps, of Lord Somers, who fills so large a space in our history, and of whom we know so little, as Lord Chatham; and yet he is the person to whom every one would at once point, if desired t name the most successful stateman and most brilliant orator that this country ever produced. Of Lord omers, indeed, we can scracely be said to know anything at all. That he was a person of unim-peachable integrity, a judge of great capacity and learning, a firm friend of liberty, but a cautious and of our wares. We have "a few more left" of the safe connsellor in most difficult emergencies, all are "Clinton Air-tight Elevated Oven Store," acknowlsafe connector in most difficult emergencies, an are ready to acknowledge. It is unfortunately too late, by supplying this information, to fill up the outline which the mea ger records of his tings have left us. | But it is singu-lar how much of Lord Chatham, who fourished within the memory of the present generation, still rests upon vaçue tradition. As a statesman, indecid, se is known to us by the events which history has recorded to have happened under his administration. Yet even of his share in bringing these about, little has been preserved of detail. So, fingments of his speeches have been handed down togus, but these bear so very Pollock, and oppose the iniquities of Franklin Pierce small a proportion to the prodigious fame which his eloquence has left behind it, that far more is manifest. ly lost than has reached us; while of his written com ositions but a few letters have hitherto been given to the world. "The imperfect state of parliamentary reporting is the great cause of this blank."

What Somers and Chatham have lost in tame. he oblivion of all the masterly efforts of their minds which, wielding the power of Parliament, conducted the march of the Government during their connection with it, the history of the nation has also lost for want of the vigor and verify; the clearness, the freshness and beauty with which its events and their causes might have been preserved in the luminous elo

f its orators. The great men who conducted our Revolutionar struggle in the Confinental Congress have left no his-tory behind them of the views and events which had their birth in their ilebates, except in the meager formula of a journal. The forvid feeling of the hour, the impelling circumstances, the argument, the eager con troversy which set the subject in every variety of light, passed away with the breath that gave them utterance; and men who were not surpassed, in the opinion of Lord Chatham, by " the master statesman of the world," have bequeathed to posterity nothing a cal of the cloquence which guided our National Councils but the shadow of a name." Recent publications show how graphic history becomes when the actors in it speak for themselves, and events as they emerge stamp themselves on its page. Congress has now taken care that this fort of genuine history shall full 1.50 from the press, full and perfect, day by day ; and thus every public man will, make his own history, and blend it imperisliably with that of his country.
