

FARM AND GARDEN.
WHAT SHALL I DO WITH THE GRAPES VINE? The American Agriculturist is taken by a surprisingly large number who are not farmers, but who live in cities and villages. Many of these...

neglected. A horse on the farm should always be cleaned at least once a day, and when hard at work both night and morning. If not at work a good grooming once a day would be efficient, and when idle good hay might be substituted for grain.

THE FARM HORSE.—There is no animal on the farm that is so likely to be neglected as the horse. The horse of the city, the expressman, the driving horse and saddle horse, are well cared for, but the farm horse is often irregularly fed, and so far as cleaning is concerned, regularly and systematically neglected.

For all Female Complaints.

This preparation, as its name signifies, consists of Vegetable Properties that are harmonious to the most delicate female system. It is a perfect strengthener, and when the system is unwell, it is a perfect restorative. It is only in consequence of the immense quantities of eggs they spawn that the carp is as plentiful as it is. But as for your country, which wishes to get quickly large quantities of young carp, you could make no better arrangement than to take out, after seeing the branches covered with eggs, either these branches, transplanting in a tub of water in order that the eggs do not get dry, and bring them to a neighboring pond, or to a small stream, or to a brook, and let the old carp altogether from your spawning pond and leave this alone to the young ones, which after awhile will swarm there by many thousands and very soon begin to take food of any kind, say cooked potatoes or bread; by giving bread constantly my children got my carp so tame that they would come and take bread from their hands.
