

War's Night Before Christmas. It was the night before Christmas—1864. Our troops had been in camp along the Rapidan for a fortnight, and everybody thought the campaign had closed.

The picket-lines were about half a mile apart, and the Confederates beyond were settling down in winter-quarters. It was Stonewall Jackson's old brigade in front of us, backed by that of Walker and flanked by other Confederate troops.

Such was the situation, when, just as the gloom of the night before Christmas settled down over friend and foe, my company was ordered out under arms. It afterwards appeared that the formation had been received to that effect by Gen. Lee and Johnston.

Then leading him to a window, and turning him so that the light fell on his face, again remarked that "the countenance was familiar, but really he could not place him," etc.

The colonel, who is a little deaf, shook him cordially by the hand, and rising, said: "Really, you have the advantage of me, sir, or—where was it I met you before?"

their natural propensities for climbing, and they apply themselves to the work with great gusto. The herd consists of some eight or ten animals, ranging from the grandmother and old "Billy" with the whiskers, down to the youngling not over a foot high.

His UNCLE TOM FRIEND.—The Semina Observer says: A good joke is being told just now on an old resident, living not a hundred miles from Sarnia.
