THE FARMER'S CORN.

At early dawn, when on the leaves The hoar-frost creeps and steals their bloom. When trees stand stiff in gloom.

At these thoughts all his heart's blood mounted to his head. Drunken, beside himself, he sprang upon the Prussian officer, tore from him his beloved standard, which he grasped with all his strength; then he strove to raise it again, high overhead, straight as a mast, shouting, "To the flag!"

The standard-bearer, who had been given the flag, was not without a certain amount of pride. He looked at the Prussian officer, and then at the standard, and then at the Prussian officer.

THE STANDARD-BEARER.

Translated from the French of ALPHONSE DAUDET.

The regiment was fighting upon a slope of the hillside, and served as a mark for the whole Prussian army.

When he reached his destination he was not even allowed to enter. The Colonel, who also was furious, decided to see anyone, but Horus was not to be put off.

At these bits of phrases were torn by his speed and his stammering speech; but in his brain the old man had his idea.

What He Would Do.

It was in the smoking car on the New York Central. There was one man who was blasting a great deal and talking of how many ducks he had fought, and behind him sat a small man reading a magazine.

A Dakota Yarn.

"Yes, sir," resumed the Dakota man, as a crowd of agriculturalists sat themselves around a little table.

One Style of Connecticut Yankee.

"Planting most done, Jedd? said the store-keeper, as Jedd dropped in for his weekly supply of my pig."

A Friend in Need.

"Jedd, will you please take dis yer money and let Pebebe and Jennie come home?"

Old Noah.

"Dew near thine ear, I pray thee," said Noah, as he sat smoking his good clay pipe by the fire.
