Making the Butter .- After the butter is taken from the charm, it should be skillfully worked entil mearly all the milk is out of it. And here riess the mosted question, whether cold water should be used in the process; whether the butter may be washed? Experience has proved that if the milk can be expelled without water, the taste of the butter will be superior; but the buttermilk must be expelled at all events: and a free are of cold water will more certainly and speedily accomplish this object than any other meane, and all other things being right, water. washed butter will be very good. The keeping mility of butter without washing is thought by any to be the best.

When the buttermilk is pretty well worked out, mah a quantity of salt should be added as suits the tastes of those who are to be its consumers. Some give seven-eigh the of an ounce of salt to ad of butter as a rule; it should be thorenghly incorporated with the butter at its first working. The batter must be subjected on the ensuing day to a second working; these two may suffice for present consumption, but for butter, intended to be kept, a third working on the third day will benecessary. The great cause of butter becoming rangid is milk left in it, therefore unless it is entirely removed, the butter will soon becom miserable in quality.

AR ROISORIAL PALACE.-Mr. T. W. Brown liter of the Wisconsin Chief, gives the followlog graphic description of his homestead, in resiy to an old fogy who objected to paying him he a series of lectures, because he was "rich and lived in a perfect palace ?:

All truth. We are one of the nabobs. Eilor the fellow who would have four chipmunks, was he killed the one he was after and three se we shall have some land when we met it. Our palace is principally of pine 22x30 one story and most ampluously furnished! It is neither plastered, papered or painted inside such anishing being too plebeian. We use the store-pipe for a chimney, and our parlor for a hall, reception room, kitchen, library, sanctum, wash-room, place to spank the children, etc. Our Brussels ingrain is made of old coat skirts, shirt-tails, dilapitated pants and other things too numerous to mention. Our fur ilture is common cherry, and our chairs i bettomed with cat-tail flags. Our spoons are PECK AXES, meetly newter silver being rather uncommon. Our chattels, personal, run up to the handsome Squre of several millions, as follows: One wife—value not to be computed
