QUIET PEOPLE.

Did you ever think, ambitious, energetic, bustling reader, man or woman, what a blessing it is that the great majority of the people of the world are not like you? If you have not, stop a moment and consider, and you will thank fortune that it is so. Men that never talk at town meetings, that don't try to become postmasters at every change in the administration, and don't stick their elbows into you in a crowd, are very likely to pass unnoticed through the world, and you have the mistaken notion that they never did you any good. Women who attend to their baking and babys, who never talk scandal at sewing societies, and don't insist on making the tour of fashionable watering places every summer, who live and die nobodies in the estimation of all but their immediate household circles. Thank God for just such nobodies. What a hubbub we should live in else. The very thought of it is painful; how much worse would be the fact. Quiet people must be those angels in disguise that imaginative people talk so much about. Very likely they will never do us any positive good; the blessing we receive from them are negative, and we pass them by unnoticed. They let us alone and the inhabitants of Secessia are not the only persons who wish to be let alone; we all of us have had that feeling more times than we can tell. We get tired of the incessant rattle of the machinery of society, and long to shut down the gate. Then we appreciate the unobtrusive attention of our quiet friends; they don't talk to us when we wish to be silent; at least they only address us with that silent language of the eye, which expresses so much but never wearies us. They never bore us by making us listen to their ambitious plans; and more they never anger us by telling us of our faults.—They don't flatter us when present, and don't slander us when away. Indeed, they pass through the world silently and unnoticed, like the leaves that fall to the wing of the zephyr, light and free.

It is horrible widely spread that some one should be willing to be the leaders of society, and would enter the lists as candidates for the favor of the world. There are men who can scarcely restrain their ambition when they can dam up the ocean. Their blood grows stagnant in the country, and they rush to the city to engage in more active and more actual and more exciting pursuits. Their goal is ever before them, never reached, and they are happy only in incessant toil. But the mass of mankind always coming in and go out at the back entry of life, and are never seen in the parlor or on the great thoroughfares. They are substrata of mankind, rarely seen but supporting others. The multitude passes them with their theological opinions, or open gives them the names of other races. They go through work in their own way and live and die peaceably and contented and happy. Let us never sneer at the quiet people. They fill their appropriate places and are a blessing to their fellow-men.—Saturday Register.
