

An exchange paper, in speaking of the nomination of Charles J. Ingersoll for Congress says:—"We could hardly believe it possible that a man, whose total want of principle had been so fully exposed, could be nominated for any office." Now, could the writer have been so ignorant of the fact that the more unprincipled a loco makes himself, the better he answers their purpose and the better he is liked? When was honesty and merit ever known to be honored by that party?
