Newspapers---Their Value.

The Udited States is literally a country of newspapers. No other people read so extensively. In no other country are the masses so generally educated, and in no other are newspapers so cheap. The National Intelligencer, published at Washington, could not be bought ight be seen mounted on horseback --- a fee in so its editor says, for $100,000. It is stated heir pockets, and a club in their hand, ready that one half of the Baltimore Patriot was sold recently for 30,000, the Boston Atlas was sold for $50,000, and not long since one-third of year thereafter, and the balance in two years, the N. Y. Courier and Enquirer was sold for to be secured by bounds and mortgage on the $25,000, and one-third of the N. Y. Evening premises. Post for $16,000. We learn that the N. York Tribune establishment has become a joint stock concern, divided into 100 shares of $1000 each, making the value $100,000.

The original proprietors, Messers. Greeley & M'Elrath, we understand, hold but a fifth each of the property, but still retain their positions as manager and editor. The other partners in the Tribune are, as we understand, Maj. Snow, the money article editor; Bayard Taylor, the poet; Dana, the political philosopher and critic, and some of the reporters,
