The headlines of the papers lately announced "Another West Point Outannounced "Another West Point Outrage." A reading of what followed showed that the "outrage" was connected with West Point only by the fact that the persons concerned in it were two students in the Highland Falls Academy—a private "military school" near West Point—who had been appointed but not admitted to the West point Academy.

The case, briefly, is this. A young man from Texas, named Buck, was spending a few weeks at the Highland Falls school, while waiting to be examined from admission to West Point. In student slang he was a "prep," or preparatory student. The "preps" naturally imitate their neighbors, the West Point cadets, and young Buck

West Point cadets, and young Buck was subjected to the usual annoyances incident to a pretty thorough course of hazing. He did not take to the thing kindly, and showed fight once or twice. He was indiscrect enough to tell a friend that he had "cleaned out the whole school" on one of these occa-sions, which provoked the hezers to show him that he hadn't cleared them show him that he hadn't cleared them out. Finally, in an altercation about the matter with a student named Thompson, Buck drew a pistol and shot Thompson in the groin, inflicting a dangerous wound. It is not yet known just how much provocation Buck had at the time of the shooting.

Buck had at the time of the shooting, nor how dangerous Thompson's wound is, but in any case it is a rost serious affair for both the young men.

The case is an instructive commentary on the folly of these twin relics of barbarism, hazing and the carrying of deadly weapons. In this nineteenth century and in any civilized community, both are equally ser seless and dangerous to the community. About a year ago pistols were freely used in a hazing scrimmage at Princeton, and a year ago pistols were freely used in a hazing scrimmage at Princeton, and a fatal result was escaped only by wonderful good fortune. Serious mental and physical injuries are not exceptional in school where hazing is customary. It is not surprising that now and then a student of quick temper and a high sense of personal digper and a high sense of personal dig-nity resorts to fire-arms to protect himself against hazing. Public sym-

It is a distinguishing chrracteristic of great leaders that they betray no worry or nervousness in moments of supreme anxiety or danger. They are never "rattled," though the peril be great and imminent. Smaller men great and imminent. Smaller men may turn pale, lose their presence of mine, and with it their grip on the course of affairs, but the truly great leader rises with the situation, and by some conspicuous display of coolness and unconcern inspires confidence in his frightened followers.

Don Cameron is unquestionably the greatest, because the coolest of the three leaders of the Grant cohorts at Chicago. The other two lost their three leaders of the Grant cohorts at Chicago. The other two lost their heads Friday, and came near demoralizing their forces by injudicious movements or loss of temper. Conkling blundered badly in hi attack on the West Virginia delegation and floundered dreadfully in attempting to extricate himself from the predicament into which he had plunged. Logan lost temper when he erroneously imagined himself assailed, and ramped and raved like an enraged fish woman.

At that supreme moment of peril the gentus of Don Cameron asserted itself. Calmiy emerging from the secluded corner where he had been watching the course of events, he reached a conspicuous position, and signalling a page gave him a whispered order. Then he waited, erect, calm, and confident. The storm of battle hushed for a few moments, whilst the combatants gazed ctantly toward the Pennsylvanian chief, whose eyes were following with quiet interest the movements of his little messenger. Other eyes turned in the same direction, and the turned in the same direction, and the little max y." mian chief, whose eyes were following with quiet interest the movements of his little messenger. Other eyes turned in the same direction, and the return of the page with a package was watched with keen attention. The chieftain stooped, received the package, unwrapped it, once more stood proudly erect and in the face of that vast and highly excited multitude, calmly devoured a huge segment of rhubarb pie.

That incident restored discipline and confidence to the demoralized and discipline and confidence to the demoralized and discipline are restored to the demoralized and discipline a

LEGISLATING ON COLOR BLINDNESS -The Legislature of the State of Connecticut has passed an act authorizing the State Board of Health to prepare rules and regulations for the examination and re-examination of railroad employees in respect to color blindness and visual power, and prescribes the method in which and the intervals at which such examinations shall be made. The act further makes provision for inflicting penalties on any railroad com-pany employing persons who are not in possession of a certificate from the examining board of their freedom from color blindness. The examiners may revoke the certificate at any time. The State Board is, in the month of May. to recommend two or more medical experts to make the necessary examinations, and the Governor is to appoint two of these gentlemen on the follow-ing first of July. It is to be hoped that other States will adopt similar measures for protecting the traveling public against the dangers incident to the visual defect of railroad employees. A BIRD EXECUTION .- About 100 persons witnessed a curious spectacle at Lansingburg, N. Y., recently. It was nothing more or less than a bird execution. An English sparrow had by some means incurred the displeasure of a pair of red-breasted robins nested in a tree near Rawson Hall. A fight took place between the sparrow and the robins on the rear of the roof of the Rawson Hall building. The sparrow fought pluckily until all at once one of the robins flew off, while the other kept up the fighting. The robin mes-senger soon returned with a piece of cord that was soon wound around the sparrow's neck and the end held in the ill of one of the executioners. This done, the sparrow was forced off the edge of the roof and briskly attacked by the other robin. Thus situated the sparrow was comparatively helpless, and in a short time hung suspended by the neck, dead. After holding their victim and picking him until assured he was beyond resurrection, the victorious robins flew to their nest in the tree, singing merrily, as though glory ing over their angu shed foe TYRANNICAL BIRDS .- One day last

nity resorts to fire-arms to protect himself against hazing. Public sympathy will go with a young man who does this, to a certain extent, even though a stern sense of justice brands such an act as a crime. The Faculty and Trustees of every institution of learning owe it to Liemselves, to their students and to the public welfare, to put down hazing with a heavy hand. On the other hand, too much can hardly be said against the folly of carrying deadly weapons, especially by people of quarrelsome and irascible tempers. It is simply tempting themselves to commit murder. It is bad enough for grown men to carry revolvers, though grown men are supposed to have learned to control their tempers. But for children barely out of leading strings to carry pistols and revolvers in their pockets as freely as marbles and tops, is much worse. If young Buck had depended upon the weapons furnished him by nature for self-defence, his persecutor would not now be lying at death's door, nor would he himself be under the shadow of the prison.

Tyrannical Birds.—One day last week some parties living in the Third Ward noticed a number of small birds of almost every variety common to this part of the country, in an orchard in a great state of excitement, and evidently intent on inflicting server punishment on something that had excited their wrath. After watching them for some time, the spectators, curious to learn the cause of the singular commotion, approached the flock of birds. The latter took flight except one, which allowed the persons to approach and pick it up. It proved to be an English sparrow; and its tormentors had destroyed both its eyes and pulled out its longue. It is well-known that these little p week some parties living in the Third Ward noticed a number of small birds would he himself be under the shadow of the prison.
