The following remedy for rose bugs has been published in some of the papers: With the first appearance of the pest, stop and cluster of the bugs, or each one separately. It kills where it strikes. A more rapid way would be to use kerosene, and then knock the rose bugs from the bush into the pan. Or immerse the bushes in kerosene, and dip the bottom of a flat bucket, pan or box, and jar the rose bugs in it.

The census of Massachusetts, just completed, shows that she has one of the densest populations on the globe. Only Belgium, Great Britain and Italy exceed her in population.
