Moravian Indians.

Gnadenhutten, when translated means 'tents of grace,' and at this quiet spot with a holy name was perpetrated a wholesale butchery of innocent people which will always remain a foul blot on the early history of Ohio. Twenty-nine men, twenty-seven women and thirty-four children were slaughter Two buildings were selected ed. for the horrible purpose, the women and babes being killed in one, the men hymns and prayers of those about to perish mingling with the death groans of their unhappy companions. The story of the crime and the circumstances which led up to it forms an interesting but awful chapter in the chronicles of the time.

In order that our readers may thoroughly comprehend the significance of the event it is necessary to go back to the year 1750. It was then that David Zeisberger, the Moravian missionary, a man of rare piety, faith and purity, was pursuing his great work among the Indian tribes. He suffered hardships in the wilderness; he endured ill treatment at the hands of th savage tribes whom he had resolved to convert, and never was heard to murnur a complaint. He worked wonders. Going among the heathen he found them demoralized by whisky sold to them by white traders, wicked and unscrupulous. He gently persuaded them to relinquish liquor, and pointed out its evil effects so forcibly that whole tribes yielded to the fascination of his eloquence and the weight of his arguments. From being frenzied brutes they became sober and reasonable peo-His influence spread rapidly from nation to nation. Thousands, in fact, embraced Christianity; Zeisberger's enthusiasm and piety carried all before them. In 1760 great progress had been made and the missions were flourishing. But that same year eyents occurred which greatly put back the work of conversion. The Moravian work of conversion. chard, peace and prosperity prevailed. In 1780 the British incited a body of highly civilized white settlers.

This was discovered, and, though it was never proved that the Moravian Indians took the slightest part in the conspiracy, they were persecuted as much as if they had. The Scotch-Irish settlers on the Pennsylvania frontier treated them with great harshness and severity. Their fate was soon decided, but it took a little further time to determine the fittest mode of butchery. One excited frontiersman suggested that they should be securely confined in two large houses and burned alive. The idea was met with shouts of approval, but one whohad an eye for future glory advised that the victims should be tomahawked and scalped. He said that it was only right and fair that they should have some trophies of their campaign, and what more appropriate than the bleeding scalps of the doomed Christian Indians? Though approving cries were accorded to the man who proposed burning them to death it is written that the scalping and tomahawking suggestion was received with even greater demonstration of delight. t was at once adopted. The following morning was appointed for the bloody deed, and the Indians were told that they must die on the mor-row. At first they were inclined to treat the affair as a joke. They could not believe whites were capable of such barbarity. The demeanor of their captors, however, soon showed that it was no laughing matter. They realized that they must die How did they behave Never was truer heroism manifested than by that band of unlettered Indians who had nothing but faith to buoy them up. They were made barns light in flesh and generally in a those which survived came into the very poor condition. There the supply prisoners, bound hand and foot and of corn was so light that breeders were compelled to buy at high prices, and it cost a great deal to fatten up a lean beast for market. Some herders who had no money with which to buy corn sent their cattle to the shambles at a very low price, thus creating a waste the supply. The western States, therefore, cannot keep up with the demand and charge prices in proportion. Another cause for the decreased supply is found in the fact that foreign shipments have been greater than during any previous year, and we have eft only a limited quantity for home

Hindquarters, which commanded 14 cents hen, are sold for $14\frac{1}{2}$ now. One cause of this discrepancy is shown in the fact that hindquarters had previously increased so much in price that people refused to purchase them, and there was created a large demand for fore quarters. The price of 'the after part of the critter' therefore only went up one-half a cent, but the general average increase is \$I per 100 pounds.
