On being told that he was accused of the murder, he stoutly protested his innocence and gave himself up, but was in jail but a short time, when he coufessed the murder to a friend and gave as a reason for doing it, that the devil was in him and he couldn't help it. A man named Weisberger, a cousin of Guitfreund, and who has often travelled with him through this and other counties, was at first suspected of being the murderer. He was in this county at the time of the murder, and leaving his pack at the house of John Emrick, in Summit township, he hastened to Pittsburgh to clear himself. A Fortune Found on a Tramp Who Died in an Almshouse. GREENSBURG, Pa., July 7.—Several days ago a tramp, a rather seedy-looking customer, applied to Freeman C Gay, the Steward, for a night's lodging at the County Home. Gay took him in, but said he would have to take a bath and clean himself before he could receive the hospitalities of that institution. Gay said they took no chance on lice or any other vermin being brought into the home. After hesitating for awhile, the German, John Henry Rheinberg was his name, agreed to take the bath and get ready for supper and bed. The first thing he did was to hand out a bag of gold. After divesting himself of his coat and vest, he unbuttoned several large, leather belts, which contained both American and German securities, and which were carefully placed away in the belts, the gold, silver and securities amounting to $21,000. After this he ate a hearty supper and retired. In the morning he did not feel very well and remained there. Toward evening his case became more interesting, when it was decided he had the typhoid fever. It was desired that he should make a will, but this he declined to do, saying that he would not die. The Catholic priest, Father Hunternach, of this place, was attending a young man close by and was about to be called in when Rheinberg Beaver [College and Musical Institute. was given a very decent burial, we are informed, in the German cemetery in Greensburg on that afternoon. The Poor House authorities, it is said, have the address of Rheinberg's relatives in Germany, and who are the rightful heirs of this money, and they are making arrangements to hunt them up and turn it over to them. It is said the deceased was a miser and did nothing but accumulate money, did nothing but accumulate money, never spending any, begging every thing and hoarding up every cent he could get his hands on.—Pittsburg Dispatch. Confusion of Terms. Those Republicans who would rather endure the methods of bossism, sooner than help crush them, for fear it would damage the party, seem to for-get that there is to-day no Republican party, in the proper meaning of the term. Since the death and burial of the murdered President, there has been a so-called stalwart faction which has arrogated to itself the name. The distinctive supporters of Garfield, and of Blaine, and of Sherman, have no more recognition or respect shown them, than if they did not live, and did not constitute the very flower of the Republican organization. If Don Cameron goes off somewhere on a drunk, the smallest Postoffice cannot be filled until he gets back, and sobers up. Neither Gov. Hoyt nor Congress-man Tom Bayne are allowed to choose their own home Postmasters; and Senator Mitchell is ignored as completely as though he was not a Senator of the second State of the Union. Selfishness of the Bosses. There is about bossism, both in the boss and his minions, a vast deal of the sink or swim, survive or perish notion. It is always all or nothing with them. In a word they care nothing for the party, as a party, as an agency in the formation of good government. They care for it only as a means to secure their own selfish ends. When it ceases to be useful in that way, it may go hang for aught they care. This is the essence of Conkling-ism, of Cameronism, of bossism everywhere.

Its use became so universal that for over 300 years no deafness has existed among the Chinese people. Sent, charges prepaid, to any address at $1.00 per bottle.
