The month of October just passed was one of the most delightful within the recollection of the oldest inhabitant. The weather on the closing days was more suggestive of early autumn than rapidly approaching winter. The leaves upon the forest trees have only just attained the brilliancy of color usually observable a month earlier. The air is balmy and bracing and the incentive for rambling or vigorous outdoor exercise is almost irresistible. Health and pleasure both abound allure those who can possibly do so to make the most of these delightful days, for there is not likely to be many more of them.

Lewis Roberts, the horse thief who was arrested at Karns City, this county, some time ago, has been sentenced to fifteen years imprisonment at hard labor in the Maryland penitentiary. His trial took place at Cumberland where he had stolen the animal he had sold in Allegheny. Roberts was at the head of a gang of horse thieves which gathered in stocks all over the country. Before embarking in this line he was a counterfeiter and in 1871 was sentenced to the penitentiary for 30 years. He was pardoned in 1877 through the efforts of a number of Pittsburghers, his attorney getting $1,000 for his services.

Owing to the large amount of literature that has had to be printed for this county's next hearing by the Supreme Court of the State, our paper was a day late last week, and this week we have waited for some election returns. About thirty Common Pleas cases from this county will be appealed—the most noted of which is the Dougal will case. There is, also, one case from the Quarter Sessions on the list—the old Summit township road case. The Supreme Court meets for the hearing of cases from Butler county and some other counties in the western part of the State, on the 27th inst, at Philadelphia. In each case two books have to be printed, the appeal and the answer. Some of these books are very bulky this year, but each judge of the Court is supposed to read them all.

Lunches and meals can be had at all hours at Morrison's City Bakery, Vogely House block.

The following narrative, which is vouched for by the owner of the horse, is certainly a remarkable one and well worthy of publication: John W. Reynolds, of the Fourth ward, this city, is the owner of the horse and was, up to a short time since, the possessor of a dog. The canine in question was an ordinary black-and-tan. Last week the horse and dog were free from restraint, and were together in the Fall tract. The dog took violently sick and laid down on the ground in a dying condition, evidently having been poisoned. The horse observed the pitiful condition of his companion and taking the dog by the loose skin of the back, carried the animal to his home, a distance of more than a half a mile, and laid it tenderly down, where it died a few minutes afterward.—New Castle Guardian.

The attorney for Mr. Sutton in the case of Mr. Ash against him—the pig pen case—intends filing his reasons for a new trial, and if this is refused, taking the case to the Supreme Court. Ash and Sutton own adjoining lots in the town of Edinboro. Ash's residence is on his lot, and Sutton has a pig-pen on his. This pen, Mr. Ash claims, has become an intolerable nuisance to him, and as Mr. Sutton would not remove it he brought suit for damages, and the jury awarded him $150. This is the first case of the kind that has ever been tried by the Court of this county and there are but two or three of the kind in the State Reports, although the elementary law books contain references to pig-sty cases tried at the English Courts. As no one but Mr. Ash was complaining of Mr. Sutton's pig-pen, the case came under the head of private nuisances, which Blackstone describes as "anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements or hereditaments of another," for which the remedy is an action for damages. The Act of Assembly of this State, gives Boro. officers the power to remove a nuisance at the suit of the person maintaining it, but this probably refers to public nuisances, or those of which more than one person complain. We have no doubt but that in every town and village in this county, there are pig-pens that are a hurt or annoyance to the neighborhood, and it seems to us that an act of Assembly should define the manner in which pig-pens should be kept in villages and towns, and restrict the number of pigs that can be kept in a certain area. All pigs should have an open space of land to run and root in. It has been decided by the Supreme Court that a pig pen in a city is a nuisance per se, in or by itself, and kept as pig pens usually are, they are, undoubtedly, also a nuisance in towns and villages.

The production of the Bradford oil field is placed by the "Titusville Herald" at 36,000 barrels per day, the Allegheny field at 13,000 barrels, Cherry Grove at 4,500 and all other fields at 8,000, making 61,500 in all. The daily consumption, it is said, now exceeds the daily production.

The Musical Institute under the direction of L. S. Leason, will give their closing entertainment in the Court House on Friday evening, Nov. 10th. The chorus will be assisted at the previous entertainment, by the Germania Cornet Band. The program contains some of the finest selections ever rendered by a chorus, and from the success of the previous concert, it is safe to predict a splendid musical east.

The oil market opened at 1.25 yesterday, but by noon had fallen to 1.17, thus wiping out the margins of some of our citizens who bought on Monday at 1.30 and over. During the morning the sales and resales at the exchanges in Oil City, Pittsburgh and Bradford, probably reached forty million barrels, which would represent a risk of four million dollars in margins. This is very extensive gambling, but it profits the brokers, who get $3.12 for each thousand barrels that they buy and sell.

There was a pretty general calling of the roll yesterday. Elections were held in the States of Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and Wisconsin—and most of them elected State officers of importance. In many cases there were features of special interest. In New Hampshire, there was a Republican revolt against the machine and alleged frauds in the nomination for Governor, headed by ex-Senator Fairbanks. In Colorado, there was dissatisfaction with the majority of the voters, which has been exercised by certain leaders; Kansas was distracted over the prohibition controversy; Massachusetts was stirred up once more by General Butler; Minnesota presents a Senatorial contest between Mr. Windom and his opponents, led by Mr. Dannel; Nebraska is debating woman suffrage; Indiana has the liquor question at the front; New Jersey elected a Legislature which will elect a United States Senator in Mr. McPherson's place; North Carolina is excited over the efforts of the "Coalition" of Republicans and Independent Democrats to beat down the Bourbon control of the State; in Virginia, the Mahone and anti-Mahone fight goes forward furiously; in Tennessee, the division of the Democrats on the debt question made a three-sided contest for Governor, with the assured prospect of Republican success, and in New York there was great dissatisfaction in the Republican party, with the manner in which Folger's nomination was secured.

The boom in the oil market that was inaugurated last Saturday was the cause of much rejoicing among those who held low priced oil and those who own producing wells. It has also revived the mania for speculation in the fluid. Since Saturday, the sales and resales have aggregated millions of barrels, and here in Butler, on Saturday and Monday, different parties bought the control of some 400,000 barrels. It now takes $100 to close a 1,000 barrels of oil for an indefinite period, or until the price falls ten cents on the barrel, when the $100 margin is lost. If, however, the market continues rising the person who has risked the $100 can hold the oil as long as he pleases by paying the Pipe Line Co. 42 cents a day for storage. This is the "bull" or "long" side of the market. In speculating, those who buy stock and hold it for a rise are spoken of as "bulls," the other side is the "bear" or "short" side. People who sell stock that they have not at the time in their possession, (to be delivered when called for or at a certain fixed date) in the hope that the market will go down, and that they will be able to buy and deliver at a less price than what they sold for, are called "bears." The "bear" side of the oil market has an advantage in that it has no storage to pay.

The price of oil for some weeks previous to Saturday, ranged from 91 to 97 cents, but on that day the market opened at $1.07 and closed at $1.19. On Monday it opened at $1.25 and closed at $1.25, and during those two days, parties in Butler risked some $40,000 in margins. If the rise is a permanent one they will all, without doubt, make some money. The producers will also make money, and drilling in and about the Bald Ridge territory will be continued.

The oil market, however, is a very uncertain thing. It is generally conceded that the heavy operators—men who buy from one to ten millions of barrels at a time—and the Standard Oil Company, which owns the pipe line, can, if they see fit, "bear" the market to any figure they please by selling out, when the price suits them, and thereby flooding the market. Should they see fit to do so during the next few days, those of our local speculators who are not quick enough to sell, will lose their money. This is what the heavy operators speak of as a shearing of the lambs—the "lambs" being the small operators. The present rise in the price of oil is due to the falling off in the production of all the oil fields, a decline which has made the average daily production less than the daily consumption. The exact amount of crude oil above ground is not known to any, but the Standard Oil Company, which holds it all in their tanks and pipes, but it is supposed to be about thirty million barrels.

Samuel E. Brindle, Jr., a Crawford county farmer, on Thursday last week left his home, with his gun, telling his daughter that he was going to the woods gunning. His wife wished him to wait until dinner, which was nearly ready, but he answered that he would be back. Not retracing a search resulted in finding him lying on his back with his gun nearly under his legs, with a terrible wound under his chin where the contents of his gun had entered, passing through his head. Life was entirely extinct. Circumstances point to suicide yet death may have been accidental. His pecuniary circumstances and domestic surroundings were prosperous and happy. It is believed of late that he had shown signs of mental trouble, but not sufficient to excite alarm.

We direct attention to the card of Mr. E. W. Croup, which appears in another place in this paper. Mr. Croup was the partner of the late Dr. Dieffenbacher, and will continue the business at the old stand.
