AN INSECT MENAGERIE. A VISIT TO A QUEER OLD CURIOSITY SHOP AND ITS KEEPER.

Mrs. Mary Treat and Her Swarm of Insect Companions—How Spiders are Tenderly Taken Care of.

VINELAND, N. J., Dec. 29.—Most readers of the Press are doubtless familiar with the name of Mrs. Mary Treat, whose studies in natural history have been from time to time recorded in the columns of the monthly magazines and other periodicals.

It is in the suite of sunny apartments, which she occupies alone, I found the spider-lover—a cultured, refined, delicate little lady, whose hair is lightly touched with gray—returning from a morning spent in an oak opening at a short distance in the rear of the house.

These are not placed there to admire," she says, "in answer to the notice that call forth, but to induce some spider, out in search of a building site. Several have settled down to business already. Would you like to take a peep at them in their own domiciles?"

"How do they subsist now that fly-time is over?" I asked. "Oh, I forgive them that," she answers merrily. "When the weather is rather cool they eat nothing. There is a colony of them now in the corner that bell-glass in the light; they have gone into winter quarters. Sometimes they keep active the winter through without food; but whenever days are sunny dinners are plenty, for I throw open doors and windows, set out some growing things to make the room bright as possible, and the flies come to harvest a small crop. It is a poor day when my spiders and I together cannot lure a few unfortunates into a neat little trap. By moderate strategy I make the capture and they put the prisoners to death."

"Is it true that they devour their kind?" "Sometimes. The male is a henpecked fellow, and the female will eat him if she gets a chance. Occasionally a mother spider kills some of her numerous progeny to feed her remaining ravenous brood of spiderlings. At one time I brought up an entire family in a bottle, and you can have no idea how interesting I found them. The babies, in astonishing numbers, swarm on the mother's back and crawl over her body until big enough to wear, which is not until they are from four to six weeks old. At that time she kicks, shakes or scrapes them off by the dozen, and after a few rebuffs they run away to set up house-keeping for themselves. It is amusing to watch the mother feed her young. I have frequently offered her a nice plump fly, which she accepted eagerly, and immediately several of the little ones were bidden to the feast. Three or four would gather around and suck the juices while she held the dainty morsel for them. When they had drawn plenty for their consumption, the mother lay came up to lay hold of the tid-bit."

"It is plain you do not share the popular antipathy to spiders," I remarked, endeavoring to make satisfactory inspection and still maintain a respectful distance from a sprightly black creature that goes stalking about on some mysterious errand connected with its spinning. "No, I have no antipathy for them," she says warmly. "They are pretty good companions when one lives alone. I have spent several years studying them here and in portions of New England, cultivating their agriculture closely, and yet I feel that I am only beginning to know them. The babies are learning to know their ways. They are learning to know their way and will take building material from my hand when I offer it. A spider lives several years, and besides their domestic life, their building and spinning and weaving which are beautifully and systematically carried on, there are births and deaths to be chronicled and curious characteristic traits which only the close observer discovers."

At the time of my last visit one fine specimen had just met an untimely death and its skeleton, packed with care, had been sent by mail to Dr. McCook who pronounced it a genuine cyclops stellata, a valuable acquisition which while the doctor profoundly regretted that Mrs. Treat could not have had more ample opportunity for studying its habits in life—he was proud to add to his collection now that it was dead. Stellata disease had also brought letters of condolence from men of eminence of our own and other nationalities, to whom the death of a spider, and such a spider, was a deplorable event. On the occasion of a visit in late autumn, Mrs. Treat was manifesting great enthusiasm over a tent-building spider which had finished off a queer little triangular edifice under the edge of the table, a dainty, gauzy affair more rare than but not so beautiful as the orb-weaver's structure. Another busy worker had struck his tent under shelter of a big leaf, were the least touch would apparently be like an earth quake among such fairy-like formations; and I—who had ruthlessly demolished many a fragile structure by a vigorous stroke of a broom—found myself involuntarily walking about on tip-toe and speaking in hushed tones while making a survey of these dainty specimens of spider-crochet. Certainly it is a generous house mistress who not only offers these little creatures building spots rent free, but helps them to the choicest nooks for nesting. A lover of spider-kind like Mrs. Treat might find opportunity to study antiquities in web-weaving by going into a certain old curiosity shop which I explored in San Francisco not long ago. "Not a cobweb has been removed, not a spider's nest disturbed for twenty odd years, proudly asserted the proprietor of a vigorous stroke of a broom—found myself involuntarily walking about on tip-toe and speaking in hushed tones while making a survey of these dainty specimens of spider-crochet.
