ODD SIGHTS IN JAPAN.

The Home Life of the Natives--Light and Airy Costumes.

Yokohama Cor. Phila. Press.

What the eye discovers in Japan may be recorded; yet that is but the fringe of the mantle that covers the inner life of any people. The home and the freedsie communion is not vouchsafed to the foreigners in Japan. Courteously and politely as he may be treated, he still is kept at a distance from all the intimacies of home life that distinguish the people of the Western World. There are so many notions and acts that seem to be spontaneous with this people that are so directly opposite to the received ideas of the Western World that one is amazed at the apparent indifference to many matters considered of prime importance elsewhere.

Here on shall see as you journey on the Tokaido, the great artery of the travel of the empire, the peasant woman naked to the hips, and the limbs uncovered above the knee, and without a thought that it is not the most natural thing in the world. 'Evil to him who evil thinks.' I know not, but it may be as a more elaborate covering of the body. These women need not their children without the disguise of covering the head of the infant and the fount at which it draws its life. When the cold demands that they don warm clothing for their comfort they put it on. When the heat oppresses them they bare their shoulders and breasts and limbs to the breezes. Unconcerned as he eye sees them, they get about their daily labor and household duties in that state of undress that would shock the life out of a fastidious woman of the Western World.

The men do likewise, only more so. A cloth is tied about their sturdy brown bodies, and hangs in as graceful folds as the Roman toga, but there is little concealment. On the street, the mosquito is left out in the cold. He may sing his song, but he cannot bite. If some one would invent some method to give the flies he would make his fortune quickly.
