of the oldest inhabitants of Venango county, informs the Spectator that "Forty-nine years ago, May 11, 1834, there was a frost in Western Pennsylvania, and no doubt elsewhere, tha created a general destruction. There was not a vestige of fruit in that year. It was a freez up, rather than a frost. The leaves on the trees were crisped as if fire had passed over them, and the young birds were frozen in their nests. The frost of June, 1859, was slight in comparison with the one we speak
