Postal Telegraph.

The strike of the telegraphers and the consequent interference with the of the country has revived discussion of the postal telegraph question. The sentiment of the press which reflects the opinion of the pub-lic, is generally in favor of the estabent of a Government telegraph service. Charles Sumner, October 12, 1875, delivered a lecture in San Francisco on the postal telegraph, wherein he said that we must look to a Government telegraph system as the only ffective remedy for the evils and burdens of telegraph monopoly. One straight blow of legislation, he said, and the reform is established and rendered as enduring as the Republic itself. Senator Edmunds, on the floor of the Senate, and in an article published in the North American Review expressed the hope that the day was not far distant when the postal telegraph would exist in every city and village of the country.

The report of the special committee to the National Board of Trade in Dember, 1880, after an examination of the unsatisfactory service, high charg company which has enjoyed a monopoly of the telegraph business of the United States, recommended the establishment of a postal telegraph. The report made to Congress March 3, 1883, by the committee on Post-offices and Postroads, with a favorable recommendation of a bill authorizing the appointment of a commission to examine into the telegraph system of the country, gave a full history of the many consolidations which the Western Union Company had brought about by the use of annoying litigation, and concluded that, although there had been the control of the Western Union an increase of the Western Union capital from $40,000,000 in 1880 to $80,000,000 in 1881, a dividend of six per cent. had been paid on the doubled capital and a surplus accumulated, thus proving that telegraph rates could be reduced by the construction of lines for cash. The act of 1866 gives Congress power to purchase at an appraisal property of companies assenting to its provisions, among which companies was the Western Union.

the length of wires was 121,000 miles. The number of despatches sent in 1881 was 31,345,861; the gross receipts, £1,633,884; expenses, £1,305,006. The price of a message of twenty words to any part of the United Kingdom is twenty-five cents, while in Canada it is the postmaster general, reduce the rate for .domestic telegraphing from one shilling to sixpence. In 1881 the Western Union Company operated 327,171 miles of wire and transmitted 32,500,000 messages. The receipts were $14,393,543.85; the expenses, $8,485,264.13. In England, Germany and other European countries the postal telegraph has reduced the price per message and proved profita-ble to the Government.

The main objections to a postal telegraph in the United States are that it would add immensely to the patronage at the bestowal of the party conroling the Government, and that a postal telegraph could only be attained by the purchase of telegraph property whose valuation has been greatly inflated above its actual worth. The Government could build telegraph lines more cheaply than it could buy the lines already constructed, but it is no part of the business or policy of the Government to injure the property of individuals by becoming their competitors for the patronage of the public. Should the Government erect lines in opposition to the Western Union, as has been unwisely suggested, the service and business would both be unsatisfactory. As it is with the mails it must be with the postal telegraph.

To be successful the Government should control the entire telegraphic system of

But until the civil service of the United States is so thoroughly pro-tected from the shifting of political winds that qualifications, merit, character and general capacity to perform the work at hand form the criterion which determines Government ap-pointments, and until permanence in office is guaranteed faithful and capable Government employees, there is no assurance that the service of a postal telegraph would not be less satisfactory than the present telegraphic service. The way to a postal telegraph is through the establishment of the civil service upon the firm basis which guarantees the successful conduct of private business.—Philadelphia Press.
