Some of the pieces are over five feet in length and nearly four feet in diameter, and weight perhaps three tons. They were all dragged on sleds over to the Diamond where they now lie. The stones for these columns were quarried at Bean's run South of town over thirty years ago. When they were takes from the quarry they were rounded and the ends cut square. Holes were then drilled in each end and iron bars inserted and fastened. A frame was then built over them, to which ozen were hitched and they were rolled to town. When Bell reached the top of the hill South of town on the old pike with his first stone, he met with an obstacle or rather the wat of an obstacle that he had not thought of, if he started down the hill with the stone as it was, it would roll over his oxen and kill them. A man chopping in the woods near by suggested cutting down a big tree and attaching it to the frame for a brake or drag, and that was the way they got them down the hill. West Cunningham Street.
