the solution in fine thread-like streams In a second system of glass tubes, filled with water, the fine streams became fine threads, which, before leaving the water, vere caught mechanically and wound around tiny rollers. After being heated and cooled in an acid of special gravity and temperature the threads were made less combustible than cotton being satur ated in a simple chemical preparation The quality of the silk goods manufactured from these threads is fine. The threads are cylindrical and are from one to forty icromillimeters in diameter. They susain a weight of 25-35 kilograms per square millimeter. Ordinary silk bears a weight of 30-45 kilograms per square millimeter; ooked silk, 15-20.
