McCarthy were granted Plumber Licenses, and some small bills were paid.

A young couple of Butler told their folks a day or two before Thanksgiving, that they were going "up the country" to spend the day, and then they slipped over to Indiana Pa. and were married. They came home and were granted a marriage license, and the first their folks knew of the matter was through the marriage license published in the Indiana papers.

On Friday morning of last week, while engaged in our usual job of mailing the BURGESS CRITZES, "we," the foreman of the paper, noticed that the effects were gone; we were unable to shake off for several hours. We will be frank and tell you all about it: While engaged in attending to nobody's business but our own, an agent for a type found in and asked if he could get an order on your type. The editor immediately asked us if any type was needed—a thing that has not occurred before to the recollection of the oldest inhabitant; and we meekly responded we would like some small piece. "The order," said his Royal Highness, and in the same breath he asked "what else?" We, getting a little bolder said we would appreciate a new font of lead letter, he said "his tone," we stood this all right, but when he asked "what next?" It took our breath away but when we came to we were more bold than before, and asked for five tons of fine job type (expecting to get killed for asking though), but the same old reply "So be it," caused us to reflect and see if we had not a screw loose in our "make up" that morning, but he appeared as solid as "pl," and he continued "anything else?" and we ordered type and labor-saving material enough to make the CITIZEN office the best equipped job set in Butler county (bring on your job). When we recovered, three hours later, we learned—not through the editor—that the cause of all this unheard-of extravagance was the arrival at the editor's office of what will (by and by) be his assistant editor. In other words: it is a boy.

LEGAL NEWS.

Court met Monday afternoon with Judge McMichael presiding, and is yet in session. The only serious case tried during the week was that of the Commonwealth vs. John (or Nossy) McBride, who was indicted for rape under the new law, for having to do with a girl under 16 years of age, on oath of Angus Beighly, a farmer who lives near Evans City and is the father of the girl; and though Nossy was convicted of the offense which entitles him to 15 years in the penitentiary there is at this writing some doubts as to whether or not he will serve his sentence.

It happened this way. His trial ended and the jury went out in his case about half-past five o'clock, Wednesday afternoon, and Nossy was taken back to jail. The jury was out but a few minutes when they sent word that they had agreed, and as the law requires, Nossy was sent for to hear the verdict. Col. Redie went to the jail and took out both Nossy and a Irishman named Noss, who had been accused and who was delighted at his release. It was dark and he started for the Court House with one hand on Nossy, but just at the Court House steps, Noss pushed between them and hid the sheriff's good-bye, who was thus put off his guard and Nossy broke for Liberty, and started towards Main St. Noss took after him and the race across the Diamond was at a speed which, if it had been continued would have taken them around the world in 20 days, but Nossy has feet as well as nose and he distanced the Sheriff, who saw him last going around the corner of the rink, and Nossy ran across the creek and jumped upon a passing train, and the last seen of him he was going up a hill some distance southwest of town. The Court waited for an hour, and then the verdict without Nossy being present.

Nossy is an oil-well driller, who has been following the oil developments for some time in the western part of this county, but his mother is said to be living near Greencity.

A Terrible Accident.

One of the most distressing accidents that has ever happened in Butler county was that on the McElliott farm, near Millersville, last Sunday night.

A young man named Randall was on tour at an oil well, and had laid down and fallen asleep alongside the boiler. Towards morning the rope holding the weight of the safety valve broke, the valve flew up, and young Randall was awakened by his clothing being saturated with escaping steam and scalding water. He was thrown into such confusion by the sudden fright and pain that he could not readily find the door of the small room for escape, and before he could manage to open the door, the room had filled with steam and he was completely scalded. Then he started to run to his boarding house, but fell by the way, and was found and carried in by the man he boarded with and who helped him to the house.

When his clothing was removed nearly his entire skin, some flesh, finger and toe nails, and hair came off, and he fingered in a great agony the Tuesday afternoon when death pangs began to be felt, submit. He was a young man and had lately been married to Miss Hildebrand, of Donegal Pa.

Mrs. Beecher's Story. It is granted to but few women to be part of such an eventful life as has been that of the wife of Henry Ward Beecher. No man of this century had such a busy life, filled with so many honors and achievements, and to view such a career through the eyes of his lifelong companion is a pleasure rarely given to a public. Mr. Beecher at the latter of the domestic fire side. "My home is my temple," he once said, and in that home he gathered round him with his nature loved best: birds, flowers, and dainty bits of china and costly gems. If he was great in public life, Mr. Beecher was greater in his home life. In one capacity he gave himself to public life, in the other he reserved himself for his family. In this latter of the domestic fire side, he was a notable series of the articles written in the Ladies Home Journal, of Philadelphia, during 1881. The articles will cover the entire period of their marriage from their first year of married life, when the couple lived on $200 for twelve months, until the closing of Mr. Beecher's great career. Mrs. Beecher will tell of "Mr. Beecher as I knew him," and thousands will gladly listen to her interesting story.
