The oil producers have organized a company to transport, store, refine and market their production. It is strictly a business project, looking to the betterment of their interests.

They believe that in the years past, taking into consideration the many and great risks of their occupation, they have not received, in the distribution of profits arising from the oil business as a whole, their fair and just share.

They have certainly a legal right to take this step. There is nothing in it to invite ridicule or condemnation. There is reasonable probability the venture can be made successful; and, considering the situation it is surely worth the trial.
