The Millerstown Herald tells the following ghost story: A Chicago young man who had spent last Sunday evening in the country, was driving home about midnight and met with a very singular incident. He is described by the reporter in the following words: "I was driving along at a pretty good gait, when, right in front of the horses, I discovered something white, at first, took to be a white dog, trotting along with us. After watching the object awhile I thought it was a dog, but I knew that a calf does not trot but runs; then I was puzzled as to what sort of an animal it was. The strangest part of it was that the horse did not seem to pay the least bit of attention to the thing. Finally I got back by the front wheel of the buggy, when I raised the whip and made a quick slash at it, but the white thing disappeared as soon as the whip came down and I could find no trace of anything. I can't understand what the thing could have been. If I was superstitious or had been drinking strong tea, I might think it was a ghost. At any rate it was the queerest incident that I ever experienced."
