There is an old gray-headed, gray whisk-ered prisoner in the Venango county jai at present whose appearance recalls one of Whittier, s poems, particularly the follow-ing lines:

"What has the gray-haired prisoner done?
Has murder stained his hands with gore?
Tot so; his crime is a fouler one—
God made the old man poor." The old man now in jail brought a suit in which he was beaten, and in lieu of the payment of the costs he is serving a term of two months in jail. His case not only suggests the poem mentioned but the advisability of having a sure case before going to law.
