The citizens of this Nation made another discovery last week, and that was the tremendous number of school children there are in the land, and also that these children can march and sing and show some appreciation of their country's history, and of their own future citizenship. Here in Butler whad over two-thousand in line, and they formed the most interesting part of a parade over a mile long, while in the large towns the number of children in line run into tens of thousands.

Their singing and other exercises, coupled with addresses, outlining the career of Columbus, and the history of this Nation, surely made an impression in their memories, and will help to make them better citizens of this great Republic. One of the first aims of education should be to impart a knowledge of the history and principles of our government, and therefore the bringing of the children into this celebration was very commedable.

For nearly twenty years—or since the anniversary of the battle of Lexington—this Nation has been celebrations have not rekindled the patriotism of the people or stimulated a universal study of history. The tremendous celebrations at New York week before last, and at Chicago last week, were as far ahead of anything of the World's Pair and dedicated last Friday, ahead of any ever before erected for like purpose.

The chief feature of the Columbian Exposition is the immense Hall of Manufactures and Arts, the largest building that the World has ever seen; and the chief feature of the dedication ceremonies of last Friday, held in it, was the oration of Chauncy M. Depew.

This Nation, and the progress made by the human race, were made possible only by Columbus' discovery, and as Depew said:

If interest in the affairs of this world are vouchasfed to those who have gone before, said:
