Mr. Cleveland's "fuck" was not with him on Saturday. Meteorologically speaking that day was a match to the one of four years ago, when President Harrison delivered his inaugural address under an umbrella in a pelting rain, and when men marched in rain for hours to comthe great parade.

The parade up the avenue presented the appearance of a marching snow drift. The wind blew from the east, driving the snow in the faces of the men on march, and thus the front of man and horse were white as if dipped in flour. And still it snowed. But the weather did not deter the people from lining the avenue, and for hours they stood in the slush and mud and the snow-flakes fell upon them and cloug to them.
