The Horrid Fate of Jumping Sam.

Small Sammy was as fine a lad As ever you did see, But one bad habit Sammy had, A Jumper bold was he. And O, his fate was very sad As it was told to me.

He never, never, would stand still He never, never, would stand still
In school or on the street;
He'd squirm if he were were well or
If on h's back or feet.
He'd wiggle on the windowsill,
He'd waggle in his seat.

And so it happened one fine day, When all alone was he, When an alone
He get to jump ing in a way
That was a sight to see.
He leaped two feet at first, they say,
Hnd then he made it three.

Then four, and five the long day through,
Until he could not stop.
Each jump he jumped much longer grew
Until he gare a hop
Up in the air a mile or two,
A-twirling like a top.

He turned about and tried to jump Back to his father's door. But landed by the village pump Some twenty miles or more Beyond it, and an awful bump He got when it was o'er. And still his jumps increased in size

And still his jumps increased in size
Until they got so great
He landed on the railway ties
In some far distant state,
And then he knew 'twould have been wi
His jumping to abate.

But as the years passed slowly by, His jumping still went on, Until he leaped from Italy As far as Washington, And he confessed with heavy eye It wasn't any fun. And when, in 1883,

And when, in 1883,

I met him up in Perth,
He wept and said good by to me,
And jumped around the earth.
And I was saddened much to see
That he knew naught of mirth. Last year in far Allahabad, Late in the month of June, I met again this jumping lad— 'Twas in the afternoon—

As he with visage pale and sad Was jumping to the moon. iso all his days, leap after leap,
He takes from morn till night.
He cannot eat, he cannot sleep,
But flies just like a kite,
And all because he would not keep
From jumping when he might.

And I believe the moral's true— Though shown with little skill—

That whatsoever you may do,
Be it good or ill,
Once in a while it may pay you
To practice keeping still.

The subject that I intend to write on is one that has been put forth to me time and again, and never given very satisfactory answers. I will try and write a few words on the subject. In regard to the weapons of argument is one that has set the doctors, who only write in disagreement cudgel ling their brains since the days when Esculapius first discovered that Brandreth's
