

A Democrat Criticizes the Wilson Bill
Hon. M. E. Ingalls of Cincinnati, president of the Big Four Railroad, created a sensation at the Democratic Jackson club banquet in Columbus, Ohio, last night, by speaking in support of the Wilson bill. He said: "The Sherman act is a good thing. It was brought about by Republican votes, and they got more credit for it than they did for the repeal. It seems to me that the administration is also open to criticism. It did not by conference and consultation arrange a compromise bill that would practically accomplish the same results and which would have passed with Democratic votes and as a Democratic measure."

There will be a meeting of the members of the Republican County Committee at the Hotel in Butler, Pa., on Monday, Feb. 5, 1894, at 10 o'clock P. M., for the purpose of fixing a date for the Republican Primary Election, and also other business that may be brought before the convention. A full meeting is desired.

The election law requires that "certificates of nomination and nomination papers for candidates for township and borough officers, and election officers and school directors in the same, shall be filed with the County Commissioners at least eight and fifteen days respectively before the day of election—the day of filing excluded and election day included in the reckoning."

After certificates and nomination papers have been filed, the County Commissioners must have the tickets printed and distributed. At the meeting of the Lincoln League Monday evening, Newton Black spoke on tariff and pensions; J. D. McKinley eulogized Lincoln, who made him honor the League, and also Galusha A. Grow, who had been elected to a seat in the U. S. Senate at the hands of the Republicans of this State years ago, and who would have had such seat had it not been for the interference of managing politics; J. M. Moore spoke of the necessity of looking after the registration lists and getting out a full vote at the February election; committees were appointed to interview Republicans who had not paid their taxes; a set of resolutions prepared by D. B. Douthett, Isaac Meigs and J. C. Kiskadee were unanimously and enthusiastically adopted. An effort will be made to have Grow speak here during the campaign.

At the meeting of the State Committee in Harrisburg on Wednesday last week, Wednesday, May 23d was fixed upon as the date of the State Convention this year, to nominate a State ticket. The committee also adopted a resolution that the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, and Auditor General of Internal Affairs and two Congressmen-at-Large.

This will necessitate the holding of our primaries not later than Saturday, May 13th, though the General Convention, which Chairman Lehigh will call together after the February election, may fix an earlier date. Gen. Hastings and Hon. C. W. Stone are the only two candidates for Governor; "Jack" Robinson and the Hon. J. M. Moore are the only two candidates for Lieutenant Governor; Mylin of Lancaster seems to have all his own way for Auditor General; and ex-Senator Shrewsbury of Millersburg and Capt. Brown of Erie would like to be Secretary of Internal Affairs, while Stewart would not object to staying on. Grow will probably be nominated for Congress and Alex McDowell is said to be in it for another term.

The great doubt as to Grow is as to whether his majority will be 200,000 or 300,000. Let us all turn out at the February election, if we do not share towards putting it to rest and settle it.

When shown the interview with Andrew Carnegie on the tariff question, Congressman Douthett, of Pittsburg, said: "It is absolutely impossible to make any change in the Wilson bill which would make it acceptable to the country. The Wilson bill contemplates a legislative crime. In the midst of great business depression, and under the pressure of a means to create revenue, it bankrupts the national treasury by cutting off from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 of revenue per annum, and creates a necessity for burdening the people with direct taxes which were never heretofore dreamed of by any sane man as justifiable in time of peace. This defect is so radical as to absolutely condemn the whole measure."

"It brutally ignores the cause of American labor. No one who is a manufacturer can get along under it. Capital can always take care of itself. But the Wilson bill gives no alternative to our workmen except to put themselves on the plane of labor abroad. It is against the interest of American education, of American homes and American morals."

"This bill must be looked at in its entirety, and not as it may effect one interest or one locality. As a measure to adjust the tariff it is so full, from beginning to end, of manifest inconsistencies, as to deserve the term patchwork. It is illogical in every way. It provides for free raw material for the manufacturers, and dears manufactured goods for the consumer. Its substitution of valorem for specific duties entitles it to be called a bill to provide for frauds upon the national revenue, and whatever else may be said, it is a sectional bill, in the interest of the men who made it. Southern members who dominate the Ways and Means Committee, and who were by education and environment less familiar with the industries, enterprises and interests of the American people. It is a measure that cannot be made acceptable to this country."

fact which will not only curtail President Cleveland's unparalleled duplicity in his dealings with Congress and the people, but add to the load of unpopularity under which the Democratic party is now staggering.

On Tuesday a quorum was secured in the House, the tariff bill was presented, and the debate on it began.

There were enough of its supporters on hand, some coming of their own accord, and others caught in the Sergeant-at-Arm's drag-net, to give the motion to proceed the consideration of the pending tariff measure 186 votes, or just 12 more than necessary. But there were more than 200 Democratic members in the House when the vote was taken, showing that the real tally members in the House were not whipped into line by the Speaker.

Yielding to wiser counsels, the majority amended the resolution so as to allow all this week for general debate, two weeks for debate under the five-minute rule, and changing the date for the final vote from January 25 to January 23. This is a slight improvement on the original program, but, as ex-Speaker Reed most forcibly pointed out, utterly inadequate to the demands of the situation, and in striking contrast to the fairness shown by the Republicans to the minority in the debate on the McKinley bill.

Chairman Wilson's speech in opening the debate, while loudly applauded by his Democratic supporters, was not without its points of interest. It fell far below the expectations of both Democrats and Republicans. The general opinion of the latter may be very forcibly summed up in the words of Congressman Daisell, of Pittsburg, to wit: "The speech was a disappointment. While Republicans did not expect anything new on the subject, they have a high opinion of Mr. Wilson's abilities, and are disappointed in the manner of his presentation. An argument, it is utterly illogical, dealing largely in statements simply dogmatic and easily disproven. As a specimen of its inconsistencies take his statement that protection does not protect the price of wool in the price of his wool, and the other that free wool will cheapen the price of clothing."

His style of argument was one not expected from a man of his standing. Quoting from the Iron and Steel Association, the words "One of the most serious rebellions on the part of wage-earners occurred last year," he took the word "rebellion" as the text for an almost demagogic argument that the protection of the tariff is a matter of allegiance to his employers as subjects held to their king. This was hardly fitting a scholar and a statesman. In fact the whole speech was a disappointment.

On Tuesday Wilson concluded his speech in defense of his bill, and was answered by Mr. Barrows who showed that the McKinley bill had fulfilled every purpose intended, and that under it the country had prospered, while the shadow of free trade had sent up workshops and was causing misery of men to be idle.

Grow's Speech at Harrisburg.
When Galusha A. Grow was escorted to the platform of the hall in Harrisburg, last Wednesday, where at the convention that had just nominated him for Congressman-at-Large, he spoke as follows:—
"Gentlemen, accept my double thanks. First, for the kindness implied in your cordial greeting to me, and, next, for the unanimous vote by which you have tendered me the nomination. Rest assured that they will ever be among the cherished memories of life."

"For the first time since 1856 the Democratic party has been intruded with the credit of government by the people, and it seems to be beginning now just where it ended then. This generation has no knowledge by experience of what a Democratic administration of the government is. The Democratic party in power is a standing menace to business. Why, the mere threat contained in its platform has completely paralyzed the business of the country. Never in our history have our industries been so prostrated, nor so many people thrown into enforced idleness as we find to-day after less than one year of Democratic rule."

"In 1862, under the wise and patriotic Republican administration, the country was in a state of prosperity. It had never known. Every branch of business in every part of the land was prosperous, and there was work for every man who wanted it at the highest rate of wages that has ever been paid, except in times of war."

"At such a time the people were called upon to elect a President and a Congress, and with that reckless spirit of change which sometimes sways the unthinking masses, the majority sought the wind and the business of the country is now waiting for the harvest. We are told by the Democrats that the present condition of affairs is a legacy from the Republican party. That is too thin a veil to cover their incompetency, and it is merely a matter of putting the blame for the present on the party that had ever known. Every branch of business in every part of the land was prosperous, and there was work for every man who wanted it at the highest rate of wages that has ever been paid, except in times of war."

"The Democratic State Convention at Harrisburg, Wednesday, nominated J. D. Hancock of Franklin, for Congressman-at-Large. Hancock is an out-and-out free trader."

Great Fire at the World's Fair.
The World's Fair Pompeii came last Monday night. A rabid fire broke out in the Gothic architecture tumbling into chaos—bewildered mobs of people—all were there, under a great starry sky of Italian clearness, with Lake Michigan's dark expanse, a second Mediterranean.

Probably no more magnificent jet-tiring spectacle has ever been witnessed this side of the Atlantic. It was long after dark when the belated people returning from work to their homes in the southern suburbs along the elevated railroad, found to hundreds of thousands of people's fair visitors, noticed a constantly enlarging column of fire and smoke ascending skyward in the east.

"The World's fair is on fire" was the cry, and, in fact, of the facinated water from the train windows slightly north of the famous terminal at the exposition grounds was reached. Directly past the scene of the frightful fire of the cold storage warehouse, where scores of firemen lost their lives during the fair, hundreds of spectators from the train to the elevated railroad court of honor. There, suddenly, the conflagration came into full view.

Whirlwinds of blazing embers were being carried from the end of the court of honor, farthest from the Administration building, to the great golden statue of the republic could be seen lighting her liberty cap defiantly aloft through the clouds of smoke and flame.

The sky was vivid, brilliant at this time with falling sparks, many of which fell away to the ground, showing a path of molten iron and steel, and various structures with fire. Every street and street car added momentarily thousands to the throngs of people, and for the terrifying spectacle and the danger to life and property, the fire was the greatest calamity of all at the World's Fair.

The fire started in the casino just east of the agricultural building and south of the main building, and spread rapidly to the top of the building, dropping, like a second line of fire along the base of the columns. The flames then sprang through the music hall which corresponds at the north end of the peristyle to the casino at the south. While the fire was spreading, the firemen were making every effort to contain it, but the fire was too strong for them.

An important battle is reported to have fought in the state of Sao Paulo, Brazil, about Christmas, in which the insurgent forces were victorious.
