Mr. Phillips' Measure.

Altogether the only remedy that can be expected to settle the question of dispute between capitalists and wage earners, is arbitration. But in order that this remedy may be effective, both sides must be willing to abide by the results of the arbitration. From the very nature of our free institutions there can be no compulsion about it.

Hearing these facts in mind, Mr. Phillips' elaborate plan to create a Labor Commission is a very good one. His commission is so specific that he simply calls for a strike to be granted.

It is a time for diplomacy, statesmanship and conciliation, rather than recrimination. The laboring men of the country have no truer friend, or one who is more earnest in his desire for their best interests than he. No one can more fully appreciate the task which his proposed Labor Commission, but if it comes to throwing new light upon a vexed problem, and can bring about a reasonable basis for the settlement of labor troubles, your end to strikes, lockouts, and other barbaries of a similar nature, the commission is well worth the comparative small amount.

Mr. Phillips' bill provides for the creation of a commission of twenty-one members, representatives of the labor, agricultural and business interests of the country, whose duty it shall be to inquire, whether the existing laws are adequate for the protection of labor, and whether any of them conflict with the principles laid down in the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. Phillips believes that such a commission may be profitably employed for two years. His own idea is that a most serious problem confronts our country today and that the deep, underlying question, is the one of equality of our citizens. It is to be hoped that Mr. Phillips' conclusion in this respect may be wrong.

These are superlatives, but the occasion can only be described by superlatives. The president was an extraordinary man, and his administration was one of the greatest in the history of the world.

These declarations were corroborated by the evidence of other senators. Mr. Jones had visited the president and Secretary Garrison and had seen him. He stated that the president was perfectly sane and sane.

There are those who say that the president was sane and sane. They say that the president was sane and sane. They say that the president was sane and sane.

WAR INEVITABLE.

A War between China and Japan over Korea seems inevitable. On Saturday a great session in the House, by which the Chinese tariff bill, introduced by Mr. Wilson, which he arrogantly attacked the Senate for its attitude on the tariff question, and submitted that free raw materials was a vital issue.

On Friday, in the Senate, Mr. Wilson moved to recede from the Senate amendments imposing duties on coal and iron ores, and followed his motion with a long reading of the tariff bill.

With regard to the President's letter to Chairman Wilson, Mr. Hill quoted those portions relating to free raw materials, and added every word that I have here reported.

The House of Representatives, fresh from the people, which represents more distinctly and peculiarly than we do the taxing power of the people.

On Saturday the House, by a two-thirds vote and after a long debate, passed a resolution proposing an amendment.

There is no change in the tariff situation at the moment. The tariff situation is still the same.

The burden of the Senate's attack on the President was that he had been perfectly sane and sane.

It is alleged in justification of his assassination that he had years been intriguing not only with Japan, but with Russia, for the purpose of creating a new world empire.

The arrangement for the registration of the soldiers of the Pennsylvania Reserves, and for its removal in Pittsburgh during the National Encampment, are nearing completion.

The discussion of some points was very warm and ended in a long adjournment, when Senator Wilson was again interrupted.
