THE CITIZEN
The German Dogs.
"We had one rather rough experience in Southern Germany," said the Professor, who had been doing Europe on his bicycle. "You know Southern Germany is far behind the rest of the country in everything, including the language. A Pennsylvania Dutchman could get along swimmingly there. The way the people talked in some of those towns made me feel right at home. I used to laugh when I heard a Cumberland county farmer say 'glazy shay' maul," for 'blimey' schone maulchen." Well, they say it over there. We were wheeling for shelter one night with a heavy thunder storm brewing and struck a tiny village where we decided to put up for the night. That was before we reached it. We found the village was later. Dogs are plentiful in Germany, and we had scarcely gotten into the outskirts of the town before every cur within hearing was trying his best to wrap himself around our front wheels. Twice my companion threw by the snapping beasts throwing themselves against the spokes, and the last time his handle-bar was bent badly. I was rolled into a ditch myself by a like mishap. Then we decided to make the best of it for the night. We dismantled and loaded our pockets with the sharpest stones we could find and rode on looking for trouble. We didn't wait long for it, either. We were riding down the main street when a big pointer darted out of a yard and made straight for us. Bradley's galley was the fellow I was with. It was one of those sleek, well-fed animals that old ladies feed of China plates and make pets of. I was afraid to throw at him for fear I should knock out some of the spikes of Bradley's wheel. Bradley saw him coming though, and snatching a stone from his pocket with his right hand, he let drive while going at full speed. It was the nearest piece of work I ever saw done. The rock and the pointer met half way in the air, and of course, the dog didn't finish the spring. He lay right down in the road, wriggling his legs a bit, and died. Then the trouble we had been hunting for arrived. Only it didn't come the way we thought it would. The whole population of that village must have been watching those curs annoying us, and enjoying the fun, for that pointer had scarcely been bowled over before the street was full of peasants who started to chase each other as if they were mad. From what I learned afterward they must have been swearing awfully. We didn't like their appearance very much and commenced to put on more speed. Then the peasants began to run and we pushed in earnest to escape the stones and clods of dirt they hurled at us. At every house we passed the crowd of pursuers grew, and as we shot by an orchard one giant old woman, attracted by the yelling, threw a big green apple at us that caught Bradley fairly on the ear. He had to nurse that ear for a week afterward. A quarter mile out of the village my saddle turned and we lost a couple of minutes, but we soon righted things and distant cur began to bark. It was a close shave, I tell you. And the college professor handed his ticket to the gateman to be punched as his train was called out. "We never stoned German dogs after that."

Her Broken Heart.
A Louisville girl has discovered a novel panacea for a broken heart, common humanity demands should be given a wide-spread circulation at once for the benefit of a suffering world. The story was overheard in that queer but popular public-house, a street car. The clever creature said to the other girl: "Oh, Louise, I felt perfectly dreadful all day yesterday. Harry and I have fallen out and we are both so obstinate that we never will make up."

"My life is a perfect wreck. I cried until I couldn't cry any more, and was just desperate to know what to do with myself when suddenly I heard a hand organ on the street—the first of the season. I rushed out and brought the man into the parlor—monkey and all—and kept him all afternoon. The antics of that monkey nearly killed me. Of course, it nearly ruined me financially, but, goodness! when one has a broken heart something has to be done."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

—Regarding "foreign" building and loan associations a Philadelphia paper says: "Advice from Harlanburg as to the effect that a number of building and loan associations of other States have secured a license for carrying on their operations in Pennsylvania, and that a number of them are exercising the privilege, greatly to the injury of people who have been induced to confide in their specious representations as to the advantages to be derived from investments with them. In this matter, we say to those who feel disposed to invest in building and loan associations, in life or fire insurance, that there is danger always in companies that offer extraordinary inducements to investors. The building association and loan business has been brought as nearly to perfection in Philadelphia as is possible of attainment. The building association system had its origin there, and is in a more flourishing and safe condition than in any other locality. If wild cat companies from other States invade this territory and offer speculative inducements, our advice is, avoid them. They are not to be trusted. The experience of many in different parts of the State already attest to the value of such caution. Avoid them; beware of them. If you desire to become a member of a building association, we have hundreds of thoroughly reliable one at home. Invest with some of them, when you can attend their business meetings, see what they are doing, and have a personal knowledge of the officers, and have a right in their selection."

—Amica & Oil Liniment is the best remedy known for stiff joints.

—As the day is getting shorter and the nights longer, people who have nothing to occupy their minds nor their time have a splendid chance to pass more of their time in bed.

—Among hotel superintendents is one that after looking over the register you should not close it, as it brings bad luck to the house. One night some years ago, in a hotel in a neighboring town, a guest after glancing over the register that it was about to turn away when he picked the growing about some people who always close a hotel register when they see it.

"What's the matter?" asked the guest. "Don't you know it brings bad luck to the house to shut the register?" said the clerk. "Oh, but something will happen before morning." That night one of a party of students who were stopping temporarily at the hotel, got up in his sleep and walked out of the window, hurting himself badly.

"There," said the clerk to the guest the next morning, "that night one of the students who were stopping temporarily at the hotel, got up in his sleep and walked out of the window when he had had luck." "I don't see how you have had bad luck," was the rejoinder; "where does the man who fell out of the window come in?" The clerk was silent.

—Did you ever notice how lightly your troubles rest on the other fellows' shoulders?
—It is now lawful to shoot pheasants.
—Foster, the weather man, is calculating on a rainy October for this part of the United States.
—Blue is the fashionable color of the season. This is probably because the people generally are feeling blue, and want their environment to harmonize with their feelings.
—Some people think that a raffle is not in violation of the lottery law. Frank Ewert, of Tioga Co. was of that opinion. He wanted to propose of his bicycle and had a lot of raffle tickets printed, which he sold at a stipulated price. Some of the tickets were sent through the mails. Now Frank is under bail in the sum of $1,000 for his appearance at the United States District court here.

—Ralph Conklin, a farmer boy of 18 years, single-handed, robbed the Bloomfield-Siles bank, at Mt. Sterling, Ill., and compelled the cashier to hand over $411. Conklin was captured and is now in jail.

—State Superintendent of Public Instruction Schneider does not take kindly to the proposition to have military drills in the public schools.

—A German statistician says that his latest discovery is that 3,000 years hence there will be but one man to every 220 women.

—Li Hung Chang is likely to lose all his single-handed, robbed the Bloomfield-Siles bank, at Mt. Sterling, Ill., and compelled the cashier to hand over $411. Conklin was captured and is now in jail.
