THE CITIZEN Thought She Was Wax. There is nothing in this world that persons dislike more than being made to appear ridiculous, and there is nothing easier than to fool persons. I went to a museum twice last week and sat down on the benches by the door of the main hall, next to the wax figure of the old man reading a program. I settled into a comfortable position, kept perfectly still and waited to see how many persons would mistake me for a wax figure. An American came in the museum and stopped and looked at me. They would look in the catalogue and find the description of the old man reading the program, but not a line about the young woman sitting near him. Then the attendant would come up and explain that I was a new figure, just made and put out that afternoon, whereupon the visitors would remark that it was a wonderful imitation and walk away. As long as they made no personal comments I could stand it very well, but Tuesday was the day for the hayseed, and I had such a funny experience with Uncle Jonathan and his wife, after I had been there some time, that it nearly upset me for the rest of the afternoon. I could see them as they came in the door—a tall, rugged man, about 50 years old, with big boots, starch hat and heavy overcoat faced with bearskin, and a little dried-up woman, dressed in the finery of some 20 years ago, with sharp gray eyes, and hawk-snout nose, a couple of feet apart, attracted attention everywhere. They began at the entrance and missed nothing. Presently they stood directly in front of me and peered curiously into my face. I began to be afraid of what was coming. I supposed that they were a couple of no natural interest, for finally Uncle Jonathan said: "Say Maria, do I look sick or anything? Do I look as if I was going to have a fever?" "Why, no, John, what you askin' me that for?" she answered, looking anxiously at him. "Nothin, only I wish you would look at them eyes in that figger's head and see if they foller you like they do me." I saw what was coming, and when she looked straight into my eyes I opened them wide and put as much expression into them as I could. Then with wonder in their faces they walked back and forth in front of me, not taking their eyes off for a moment. I did not move, but let my places follow them without winking. Presently the woman said, turning to her husband, with a pathetic little quiver in her voice: "I think, John, I'd like to go home. Them figgers is so likin', it's almost scary, and I don't think I want to see any more." By this time several persons had gathered around the couple, their actions attracting more attention than any thing else. I was so interested in watching the spectacle that I found no great difficulty in keeping an unmovable countenance. "Puff! Wimmen is always afraid of things!" Uncle Jonathan retorted, with a great show of bravery. "I will just show you how silly it is to be scared of only a figger, when the figger is so common." He took hold of my arm, and started to put his hand under my armpit when, still keeping my eyes on him, I said in an deep and mechanical voice as I could assume: "Repeat and sin no more!" He gave one blood curdling howl and started on a dead run for the door, his wife following with trembling limbs. Others became very much excited and followed the couple to the door, and for a few moments a pandemonium reigned. When the attendant tried to stop the man he dropped on his knees and, lifting his clasped hands, said: "I'll never touch another drop of long as I live. Mister, please let me go! Mariner, she'll wonder what I say to you, Mariner! Oh, Lord, to think I've got 'em so bad I see was figgers talk!" Farmers who have been annoyed by persons who go about painting advertisements on barns, fences, and other places, will be interested in the law affecting that matter, which we herewith publish. It was passed June 8, 1881, and is as follows: "If any person or persons shall, without the consent of the owner or owners thereof, wilfully deface, paint, advertise, paste placards upon, or otherwise deface the walls of any building or buildings, house or houses or fences around yard or yards connected therein or any fence or railing or inclosing any vacant lot or lots, farm or farms, or other places, to be done by others, such offenders shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding $25 and undergo an imprisonment exceeding 30 days, or both, or either, at the discretion of the court." The best way to get the advertiser to reach the people is through the newspapers.

How to Avoid Colds. So much has been written about colds in medical papers that it would seem that nothing new could be said upon the subject. But a writer in the New England Medical Gazette has set forth certain ideas, which, if not new and original, are certainly suggestive and interesting. The usual practice is when a cold has been contracted to put on more clothing, to take doses of hot drink, to immerse oneself in a close room and wait for recovery. This is declared to be all wrong, and the writer recommends a treatment diametrically opposed to this. Colds are defined to be a diseased condition of the mucous linings of the body due to over-dressing, to over-dressing. When one has caught cold, says this authority, he has simply deprived the skin of its proper function by covering it with heavy flannels, by choking its pores in a hot room, or by over-eating. The writer cites the instance of a family, the members of which were invariably prostrated with influenza after dining on roast goose. It is also stated that Benjamin Franklin used to cure a cold by taking off his clothes and sitting the instant of a family, the members of which were invariably prostrated with influenza after dining on roast goose. The rule prescribed, therefore, is to get up at once a reaction to the skin.—A bath and vigorous rubbing are the first step, attention to diet is another, and vigorous exercise in the open air to the point of perspiration is recommended as the means of driving away the most disagreeable cold. Once cured, vigorous dieting and more elevated temperature are prescribed as preventives of a recurrence of the malady. Reiteration is a novel mode of curing a cold, but in this age of new inventions and rapid progress in remedial agents, who shall say it is not possible to cure colds by freezing it to death? —Baltimore Herald. Drunkenness, the Liquor Habit, Positively Cured by an astonishing Dr. Haines' "Golden Specific."
