Friday morning, saying that they had a man surrounded in a house near there, that me had a shot gun, and that they had guns, and that the Sheriff's services were needed immediately. The Sheriff and Jim Shillman drove over to Prospect that afternoon, and the Constable met them there and said that the man had escaped, had boldly marched out of the house with his gun in hand, defying the whole crowd. But the Sheriff found where he had gone that the Brooks law specified the classes intended to be accommodated by licens and that tippling houses were not within the meaning of the act; that class legislation should be strictly construed; it was the duty of the court to Yestrain the sale of liquor to the purposes of the Act of Asembly; the applicants prove the necessity his gan in hand, delying the whole crowd.
